VOL. VI.....NO. 1833 NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, AUGUST 4, 1857. PRICE TWO CENTS.

THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

THEIR PROCEEDINGS ON MONDAY.

They Vote 172 Times and Make No Choice of a New Commissioner.

The Republicans Adhere to Cyrus Curtis, the Mayors Vote for David Banks, Uriah Gregg for Erastus Brooks.

About the Counsel to the Board—Station-Houses, Trials, &c.

THE NEW NOMINEES—OUTSIDE GOSSIP.

The Police Commissioners met at their office in [illegible] at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Every [illegible] was in his seat at the appointed hour. [illegible] Bon occupied the Chair, and called the meeting to order.

The reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with. The Chairman then stated that the main business was the special order—the election of a Commissioner in place of Mr. Drake, resigned. This business was accordingly taken up.

The first ballot stood thus:

[illegible] .....Cyrus Curtis.
[illegible] .....David Banks.
[illegible] .....Cyrus Curtis.
[illegible] .....Cyrus Curtis.
[illegible] .....Erastus Brooks.

[illegible] declared the Commissioners [illegible] with little surprise—some of the other gentlemen with a little more gravity. The Commissioners continued to vote, each vote being the first ballot.

The Secretary, however, the officers in attendance, and the spectators looked dejected as the results of the votes were reported. Both Commissioners remained resolved. Messages were received and sent, and letters answered and sent.

When the 172d ballot was announced, Mayor Fernando Wood said impatiently:—"Had we not better stop here, gentlemen? According to precedent 170 ballots constitute a day's work. Shall we not better stop."

Mr. STRANAHAN—Does the gentleman make that as a motion? That 172 votes constitute a day's work of this Board? [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER (smiling)—Well, it's according to precedent, sir.

Mr. STRANAHAN—I believe we are paid by the day, not by the job, and we should earn our money.

Mr. FOWLER—Yes, you are paid; you have the advantage of us in that matter.

Mr. STRANAHAN—Judging from the former pay of the Police in your City, Mr. Mayor, I should say that you can afford to work cheaper over there than we can.

Mr. FOWLER—But we have to work for nothing here.

Mr. STRANAHAN—That, to be sure, is to be taken into consideration.

Mr. FOWLER—I now move that we postpone further voting until Wednesday.

Mr. STRANAHAN—I think we should proceed to-morrow.

Mayor WOOD—I doubt if I can attend to-morrow. I have duties to perform, in my office, which cannot be neglected. I have already neglected pressing business to attend these meetings. I move that the election be made the special business for Wednesday.

[illegible] MADE THE SPECIAL ORDER FOR WEDNESDAY.

[illegible] motion was then put and carried, all [illegible] voting in the affirmative.

[illegible] THE ARBITRARY SALARY QUESTION.

[illegible] called up the matter of the abolished station-houses. He said that, as the old or regular station-houses were not given up, the Board was compelled to rent others, and he believed that the Independent Party caused become a tax upon the City Corporation. In support of the view he read the 60th section of the Metropolitan Police Act, which is as follows:

"In case the said Common Councils, or either of them, neglect or refuse so to do, (i. e. furnish Station-Houses, &c.) after having been thereto requested by the Board of Police, then the said Board may use their own provisions in the premises, and the expense, when made, shall become a proper charge and debt, for the expenses and disbursements thereof, against the said city or cities whose Common Council has so neglected or refused."

"In my capacity as Treasurer of the Commission," continued Mr. Bowen, "I called upon Comptroller Flagler for the money under this provision, and that officer replied that he had no funds. Now, a part of the twenty-eighth section of the act from which I have read, provides, also, that 'no expenses other than salaries and pay therein provided shall ever be incurred by the Board of Police except for rents, stationery, printing, advertising, fuel and light, unless the same shall be expressly authorized by the Board of Supervisors,' &c. I think, therefore, that the question is involved in some obscurity, and consequently more that it be referred to the counsel of the Board."

Mayor WOOD—Who are the counsel of this Board?

Mr. SOWER—Messrs. FIELD and NOYES.

Mayor WOOD—I cannot find by your minutes, Mr. Chairman, that you have ever appointed any counsel to the Board.

Mr. NYE—We shall probably soon see their bills, however. [Laughter.]

Mayor WOOD—I disclaim, Sir, that any counsel has ever been employed by this Board.

Mr. SOWER—I suggest whether the matter had not better be referred to the Corporation counsel.

Here the matter dropped, and a motion was made that the Board adjourn to Wednesday, but this motion was withdrawn when the fact was made known that [illegible] DEPUTY CARPENTER AND OTHERS [illegible] Wednesday.

Mr. [illegible] that we not postpone till Wednesday, [illegible] for the reasons which I have already stated.

Mr. SOWER—The convenience of the Mayor of New-York cannot be consulted in all these matters.

Mr. NYE (the Chairman) inquired whether the Mayor of New-York wanted to be present or take part in the trial of Mr. CARPENTER.

Mayor WOOD—I may not want to take part in it, but I may want to vote.

The Chairman—Will not the parties to the suit consent to postponement?

Mr. NYE—The trial of Deputy CARPENTER has been made the special order for Tuesday at 10 o'clock A. M., and it cannot well be postponed without an application on mutual agreement from either of the parties. I think the safest way would be to adjourn to the time specially appointed, to postpone the trial.

Mr. CHAMBERS—Then, with this understanding, I move that we adjourn till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was adopted, and the Board adjourned.

WHO ARE CANDIDATES ARE.

Not everybody knows who and what are the gentlemen voted for as Police Commissioners in place of Mr. DRAKE. For the information of the nonplussed, therefore, we make a note of it that to whom the Republican members of the Board adhered steadily, is an old Whig. He was born, we believe, in the city of Hudson, where for many years he kept an extensive dry goods establishment. He afterwards engaged in the same place in the oil business. He was several times elected to the office of Mayor of Hudson. He removed from that city to New-York some ten or a dozen years since, and is engaged here also in the oil business, being a member of the firm of CURTIS, MITCHELL & Co., whose place of business is in Water-street. Mr. CURTIS was some time since appointed a Commissioner of Emigration, and this position he yet retains. He has not of late years meddled much in politics. He is about 60 years of age. He is yet a fine-looking man, and wears his age remarkably well.

ROYAL PHELPS,

for whom Mayors WOOD and POWELL voted on Saturday, is better known. He is a lawyer of some repute, and has always taken a conspicuous part in Democratic politics. He was particularly active during the late presidential campaign. His residence is in this City. His age about 45 years.

DAVID BANKS,

Who was yesterday voted for by the two Mayors, had liked to escape the attention of the rising generation. This City has been his home for a great many years, and, unless we err, it is his birth place. He studied, but never practiced law. He is now, and has been for a long time, senior partner of the well-known firm of MATHER, GUILD & Co., LAW Booksellers, in Nassau-street. He was many years ago an active Democrat—one of the old-fashioned kind—and was several times elected to the Board of Aldermen from the Fifth Ward. This was about 1832. Since then he has not taken much part in politics. He is about 62 years of age. His home is in Fifth-avenue.

Not a word need be said about ULLMANN and BROOKS. They were "done" in various ways quite recently. They are both "American" in politics and both are defeated aspirants for the Governorship. CHAMBERS appears to have a penchant for such—when other names may be brought forward in this [illegible] we must wait till Wednesday to learn.

REPEAL MEETING IN THE NINTH WARD.

Democratic Rally—Letter from Mayor Wood—Speeches and a General Good Time.

The Democratic forces of the Ninth Ward assembled last night at the corner of Hudson and Barrow streets, as the allied forces of Great Britain and France assembled lately before Sevastopol, only not quite so numerous, and not altogether so intrepid. But they assembled, if less numerous and intrepid, still with vigor, rockets, Roman candles and torches. The stars and stripes were suspended in diverse directions from adjacent trees; bonfires blazed in the street, and urchins shouted for tar barrels, which by a great overnight were not forthcoming.

The meeting assembled, in pursuance of the following call:

NINTH WARD CITIZENS, AROUSE.

DEMOCRATS TO THE RESCUE.

SHALL FOR MUNICIPAL RIGHTS BE PRESERVED?

The Democratic men and other citizens of the Ninth Ward expressed to the obnoxious measures passed by our last Legislature, and desirous of preserving intact their municipal and corporate rights, and throwing off the shackles of an unscrupulous oligarchy, are invited to assemble in at the junction of Hudson and Barrow streets, on Monday evening, Aug. 3, 1857, at 8 o'clock. Should the evening prove stormy, it will be postponed until the first fair evening.

The following gentlemen have been invited to address the meeting:

Hon. Fernando Wood,	Hon. Judge Sutherland,
Hon. John Kelly,	Wm. J. Rose, Esq.,
Hon. Elijah Ward,	Col. Alex. Ming,
Hon. Wm. R. McMurray,	George D. Kellogg, Esq.,
Hon. E. R. V. Wright, of New-Jersey,	Dr. A. J. Cassdaey,
Thomas N. Carr, Esq.,	Eugene Sullivan, Esq.,
Stephen D. Dillaye, Esq.,	Charles E. Smith, Esq.,
C. Schermerhorn, Esq.,	Thomas Jones, Jr.,
	J. McLeod Murphy, Esq.

ALEXANDER L. SHAW,
Chairman Ninth Ward Democratic Enrolled Association.

The platform from which the orations were dispensed was erected on Barrow street, on the "side front" of WALLY MASON's old location. Lanterns that were not lighted, had the following inscriptions on their sides: "Eternal Vigilance the Price of Liberty." "It is the Right of the People to Choose their own Rulers." "The Union and the Constitution, by the Eternal," &c., &c.

Ex Alderman WILLIAM J. BRIERLEY was, on motion of Mr. SHAW, appointed President of the meeting, after which the following letters were read:

LETTER FROM MAYOR WOOD.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, July 30, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your kind invitation to attend and address a mass meeting of my fellow-citizens of the Ninth Ward, this evening, on the subject of the obnoxious laws passed by the Legislature, I beg to assure you that, however gratifying such an opportunity would be to discuss this subject, I do not feel at liberty to do so at this time.

Law, however, not the less interested in these frequent assemblages of indignant citizens. New-York has been ignominiously put under the ban of a foreign power, ignorant of and indifferent to our wants and necessities, and New-Yorkers should not hesitate in hunting back, with bold, defiant tones, their condemnation of the invaders and their acts.

It is only by free interchange of sentiment, and a full discussion of the great principles involved in the present instance, that the people can realize, to its extent, the base character of those, who, regardless alike of the rights of man, and the theories of our Government, seek to trample down the common principles guaranteed to all American municipal communities.

Therefore I am glad of these meetings; glad that measures have been aroused; glad that the immediate sufferers in this unholy crusade will stand up manfully in behalf of their homes and firesides.

It behooves us in this spirit to continue this agitation until the oppressors are rebuked, and their oppressions ignored. New-Yorkers must fight the battle for New-York.

"Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow."

I send to my fellow citizens of the "Old Ninth" hearty greetings upon the action they are disposed to take in this effort. Say to them that I am with them, and that, if life and health are spared, I shall take decided ground when the high court of the ballot box shall be convened to try this issue. My voice and mighs shall be devoted to the redemption, disenthralment and regeneration of New-York from the hands of the spoilers.

Very respectfully, &c.,
FERNANDO WOOD.

To Messrs. LAWRENCE, BRUCE, &c., Committee.

LETTER FROM GENERAL WARD.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Aug. 1, 1857.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your invitation to address a mass-meeting of the Democracy and other citizens of the Ninth Ward, on Monday evening, the 3d inst. I regret to say that it will not be in my power to be present on that occasion. I cordially approve of the objects of the meeting, and shall at all times cheerfully cooperate with my fellow-citizens in any measure contemplated to stop the obnoxious laws passed at the last session of the Legislature, affecting the rights of the people of New-York. The political annals of our State do not present such a wilful and deliberate attempt to invade the Constitution, and deprive one third of the population of the State of the right of self-government. These acts show a bold and unblushing effort on the part of a small minority to seize the vast patronage of the City for partisan purposes, and advance the interests of a party hostile to the great commercial and industrial classes, regardless of all consequences.

Distribution, not concentration of power is a leading principle of the Democratic Party, and I trust agitation will continue until the people are thoroughly aroused to the serious encroachment that has been made upon their rights, and these offensive laws are repealed. Our cause appeals to all classes and sections of the State, and I have a strong conviction that these acts will recoil upon the originators, and that we shall be early restored to those privileges of which we have been so unjustly deprived.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,
ELIJAH WARD.

Alderman WM. J. BRIERLEY and others of the Committee.

The President, Alderman BRIERLEY, then briefly addressed the meeting. Mr. THOMAS BELL then nominated the Vice-Presidents and Secretaries.

Vice-Presidents.—John B. Spafford, John McNichol, Frederic W. Steinrside, Barney Rice, William Bruce, Thomas Lawrence, John Lenglis, John Hannan, William Valleau.

Mr. HENRY H. MORANCE was next introduced to the meeting, and offered the following resolutions, which were received with rapturous cheers, and several Roman candles:

Resolved, The National Democracy of the Ninth Ward, in mass meeting convened, hold and esteem as one of the most cherished of the many glorious results of our Revolution of '76, the right of assembling in open conclave there to condemn or approve the acts of our law-givers and Representatives, or Outbreaks upon the future of the Republic, its perpetuity and well-being, and believe it to be a prerogative next in importance to the exercise of the elective franchise, not only by reason of the influence it exerts in making incentives to renewed action, but from the solemn lesson it may teach our rulers that the people are sovereign, that they alone are the source of power, and that their voice is omnipotent; and,

Whereas, The tyrannical and obnoxious acts passed by the last Black "Republican" Legislature, (which in their nature and operations are so injurious to the best interests of our City, and tend to deprive us of our municipal rights, and make us but a dependency of the corrupt oligarchy which has its head at Albany and its lower parts in New-York,) compel and urge us by every tie and recollection of the past and hope of the future to speak out in thunder-toned and pacific tones to our sister Wards that the Old Ninth is yet alive, her campfires lit and her warriors in the field, and that unbroken our banner to the breeze as we do here to-night, sworn to stand or fall in defence of Old Manhattan, is recognized as a city having equal rights with her sister cities of the State and Union. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we most unquestionably condemn the acts of the last Legislature in reference to the City of New-York as partisan in their spirit, conducing to centralization, concocted for the purpose of achieving political advancement, and having for their main object the reward of unscrupulous adherents of the dominant party and traitors from our own, at the cost of our commercial prosperity and the growth of our City.

Resolved, That identified as we are with the varied interests of our City, we view with feelings of alarm and apprehension the encroachments that have been and are being made upon our municipal and corporate rights, and that the firmness, ability and devotion exhibited by His Honor FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor of our City, in their defence, shall ever be remembered, and establishes a lasting claim to our gratitude and respect.

Resolved, That though traitors to the Union would nurse the fanatical spirit now unfortunately so rampant, yet we call upon our sister cities, and the National Democracy throughout the State, to make one gigantic effort in the coming elections, to wrest the sceptre from the hands of our enemies, and place the ship of State under the guidance of men who will not be willing to sell or barter away the rights of the people for a mess of porridge.

Resolved, That all attempts to crush out the National Democracy of the City of New York have and must ever prove futile. The mercantile interests of our City are too extended; the ties which bind it to the South, the North and West too numerous; the hallowed memories of the past too sacred, and its grand and glowing future too brilliant, since it is but a few years hence when it shall be the queen City of the world, its hoy whitened with the sails of every nation, its population exceeding that of the boasted capital of Great Britain; its marts crowded by people of every clime, its public buildings and institutions the admiration of the world, and its citizens foremost in every department and industry of life; these are the links which constitute the flowery chain that united us indissolubly with our brethren of the South and elsewhere throughout our glorious Republic, and can never be severed until demagogues and traitors shall pollute the founts of public justice, and emissaries of other governments distil their baleful poison into the minds of our people.

In effect, That we shall buckle on our armor for the coming fight, and plaster to the ground the vile traitors within our midst, if they will first the Old Guard of the Empire-Ward count to battle for the right, marching in cool solid column to share the dangers, and, we sincerely trust, the fruits, of our glorious victory.

Resolved, That we cordially and enthusiastically approve the policy and action of the administration of JAMES BUCHANAN, our worthy and illustrious Democratic President, and that, especially in the appointment of AUGUSTUS SCHELL, as the Collector of the Port of New-York, the Administration has fulfilled the expectations of the Democracy of this City, recognized an efficient, honorable, high-toned, and consistent Democrat, and secured for the public service the aid of an honest and popular officer.

Mr. THOMAS N. CARR, of the Seventeenth Ward, was the first speaker, but the noise on the platform was so great that it was impossible for the reporters to catch any connected sentence. He said something about its being a number of years since he had addressed the people, although his whole life had been with them, and he was glad to find that they intended to drive their oppressors out of existence at the next November election. There was nothing to compare in the tyrannical legislation of any country with the abominable acts of our Albany tyrants of the last year. No European despotism would have dared do it. Switzerland, when Austria tried it on, arose, and crushed down such despotism, and was again free. There was not an act committed against the American Colonies by GEORGE III. that was equal in despotic character to the Albany despotism. And yet he was compelled to say that if it had not been for false Democrats, those oppressive acts would not have been passed. The speaker especially denounced DANIEL E. SICKLES, Postmaster FOWLER, and District-Attorney A. OAKEY HALL, as the concoctors of the new Police bill.

The next speaker was GEORGE D. KELLOGG, Esq., who was received with loud cheers. We have gathered together, he said, for the purpose of expressing an opinion upon the acts of our law-givers; to put our shoulders to the wheel and assist in repealing the infamous measures of the last Legislature of this State. The pecuniary state of public opinion is not the result of an ordinary moving of the sea of politics, but the angry waters of strife are stirred up, and threaten to wash away the very foundations of our Municipal freedom; an attempt has been made to bind us hand and foot, and subject us to the dominion of a foreign master. A few of our citizens, aided and abetted by a corrupt regency, have sold their birthright for a mess of pottage; they have proved themselves false to fair promises, and in the name of the law have most wilfully perverted the law; they have passed a series of oppressive acts, with the hope of degrading us in the eyes of our sister cities, and which will degrade us, unless the people arise in their might, and speaking through the ballot boxes, say with overwhelming emphasis, "These laws shall be repealed." The speaker then went on to review the laws, characterizing them all as attempts to use the legislative power for political purposes, and an evasion of the State Constitution. Speaking of the Excise law he said that this bill aimed directly at a large business interest of this City; that certain men of influence and wealth would be able to buy and sell, to the exclusion of those who have as good a right civilly and politically, as those who might be able to furnish signers of their petitions.

In conclusion it was urged: "Shall the men who have battled so manfully for our chartered rights be deserted? Shall we now basely leave these champions of our civil liberty to the enemy? Shall those who have taught the Albany regency to respect our chartered rights be now deserted by those who desire to see this great City occupying a proud position among the municipalities of the world? If these things ought to be so, then shall we lay down our claim as the citizens of the metropolis of this country. We might as well at once surrender ourselves to our enemies, and although professing to be representatives of an incorporated City, yet bound hand and foot, give ourselves passively up, and say to the inhabitants of the rural districts, we are your hewers of wood and drawers of water."

Dr. A. J. CHADSEY, of Schenectady, next came forward, and was introduced by the chairman. He thought such a sight as that before him would make tyrants tremble on their thrones, and strike terror to the hearts of all foes to liberty. He was proud that his father was a Democrat, and that his grandfather was a Democrat; but of his great grandfather the speaker said nothing. It was the Democrats who had fought every battle that had been fought in our country, and who carried us safely through the war of 1812. He thanked God that it was the same Democracy that animated them that had animated the citizens of New-York since last Fall. The speaker said it was the German vote which turned the tide of election last Fall. They were the unfortunate class that was offered to the Moloch of Black Republicanism. The speaker then adverted to FERNANDO WOOD, and said that pamphlets had been written against him, but it fell because none of his assailants to throw the first stone. Shall it be SIMEON DRAPER to throw the first stone? Shall it be General NYE? The speaker closed with an appeal to his audience to vote for Mayor WOOD at the next election."

Mr. KENNIGAN here varied the exercises by a song to the tune of the "King of the Cannibal Islands," in which Kansas, FREMONT, the Woolly Horse and the New Police were common terms.

The following was the refrain:

"Their acts they do but plainly show,
They receive instructions from down below;
Old Harry is always at their elbow,
For they are all in combination."

The next speaker was Gen. E. R. V. WRIGHT, of New-Jersey.

He thought that the question before them was not strictly a local one, but one in which all citizens could feel an interest and take part. He came as an outsider, with an outside view. The outsiders were more cool and deliberate in considering the subject than the citizens of New-York. Mayor WOOD had placed the police organization on a firmer footing than it had ever been before he came into office. He read the papers every day, and he scarcely saw an account of a single crime which the old police would not have prevented. The gentleman alluded to pipe-laying in connection with the name of SIMEON DRAPER—that individual whose excessive modesty induced him to retire from a Board where he had no power. The speaker conceded that his Democratic hearers could not muster votes enough to defeat the Black Republicans next Fall, unless they appealed to Liberal Americans and Republicans to come to their aid. The speaker was so impressed with the enormity of the laws passed by the last Legislature that he hardly knew where to begin to tackle them. As to the Commissioners, they certainly accomplished one thing—they have been drawing $6 per day.

Col. ALEX. MING followed General WRIGHT. He said he had seen, for the first time in his life, a retrograde movement to abridge the people's liberties. The Colonel spoke of the glories which encircled the brows of WASHINGTON and his associates, and then came down to and on Black Republicanism. The Legislature of the State was denounced, and the obnoxious laws passed by them were denounced, and finally, after giving everybody outside the Democratic Party a drubbing, the speaker sat down.

After speeches by Professor J. SILLIMAN and others, the meeting, which had dwindled down to a small crowd, gradually dispersed.

A VIGILANCE COMMITTEE ORGANIZED.

The Fifth and Eighth Wards Form an Association, as suggested by the Death of Mr. Van Liew.

The adjourned meeting of the citizens of the Fifth and Eighth Wards, convened for the purpose of perfecting the organization of a Committee of Safety, was called to order by Mr. JAMES L. WAGER, the Chairman, at the Fifth Ward Hotel, last evening.

In the absence of the Secretary, Mr. JOSEPH TAYLOR was appointed to fill his place, and read the minutes of the previous meeting, which were approved.

LEMUEL W. PARKES, Esq., President of the Committee on Safety, previously appointed, before reading their report, remarked "that politics had nothing to do with the objects of the Association, and citizens without regard to party considerations should join in the present movement."

The following is the REPORT.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Aug. 3, 1857.

The Committee appointed at a meeting of citizens of the Fifth and Eighth Wards, held at LAIRD'S Museum Hotel, on Wednesday evening last, July 29, to prepare a plan of organization for the protection of the peaceful inhabitants of the two Wards against the hand of the assassin, and the lawless depredations of bands of ruffians and desperadoes who infest the City, and render both life and property among us insecure, beg leave respectfully to report—

That they have had the matter committed to their charge under serious and deliberate consideration; that they have endeavored to bring to bear upon the questions involved, and the evils that surround us, every light which experience, observation or reflection could shed upon the subject, with a view, if possible, to present some feasible scheme or plan by which our citizens may be fully protected, without, at the same time, putting in jeopardy, or invading in any manner the acknowledged and legitimate rights and privileges of a single member of the community. Your Committee would take leave here to say that the expression which has gone abroad since our last meeting, and to which some evil-disposed or interested parties have sought to give currency, that an intention or purpose was entertained by the members of this Committee to take steps or propose measures that might be construed as interfering with the duties or prerogatives of the proper authorities, or to supersede in some respect their action—for in some manner to place ourselves in conflict with the laws—is entirely erroneous, and without the slightest foundation. So far from this, (as will be seen in the sequel,) we intend to act, if we act at all, in strict subordination to, and in concert with the constituted authority of the City—and only aim (as auxiliary helps) to aid them in the discharge of their arduous duties. With these views your Committee present the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, Recent events of a most startling character—the riots that have disgraced our City and drenched our streets in blood, paralyzing in a measure the arm, and baffling for a time the efforts of the civil power to suppress them; and,

Whereas, owing perhaps in part to the recent disorganized condition of our City Government, the turbulent and vicious, the profligate and depraved, from all lands, invited hither and encouraged by the peculiar state of things existing in our midst, and uniting with our own vicious population, have made this City and its manifold sinks of pollution, brutality and crime, their congenial haunts from which to swarm forth by night and by day, to waylay and rob the insultous stranger, and even our own peaceful, and well-known and most respected citizens, beating them down or garroting, and then dragging them into dark lanes and alleys, robbing and even murdering them in cool blood, without the least compunction or remorse, and

Whereas, the most recent victim of their cruel brutality was our own beloved fellow citizen and neighbor, AUGUSTUS T. VAN LIEW, who went forth from his family but one short week since, in the confidence and self security which are inspired by our theory of popular government, and the belief in the majesty and efficiency of our laws for the protection of life, but returned no more to that wife or those little ones alive, and

Whereas, From the many and increasing demonstrations of lawlessness and crime everywhere pervading this metropolis, and the general impunity which all grades of offences seem to be perpetrated, a growing distrust is felt in the power of the civil arm, especially in the present incomplete organization of the Police force, to cope with the organized bands and disorganized elements of evil that so abound in our City; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the citizens of the Fifth and Eighth Wards, hereby organize and resolve ourselves in an association, to be designated the Fifth and Eighth Wards Mutual Protective and Law and Order Association, and that we hereby tender our services to the City authorities to assist them in the detection of crime, and the conviction and punishment of the culprits, and that we pledge ourselves to afford every information and aid to the Police and to the City magistrates in our power to give, to the end that law and justice may be vindicated, and the vile offenders against the peace and good order of society may be brought to condign punishment.

Resolved, That we hereby assure the public, and pledge to each other our word of honor never to suspend or intermit our efforts in this behalf, to sustain, strengthen and uphold the arm of justice and the supremacy of the law, until the exigencies of the present crisis shall have passed, or until the advent of a better state of things shall render our organization unnecessary.

Resolved, That all those (belonging to the Fifth and Eighth Wards) who approve the above resolutions are requested immediately to enrol their names and places of residence on a list to be kept by the Secretary, and by consent of the public authorities to act as conservators of the public peace and welfare under such directions as may be hereafter determined by the Association.

(Signed,) JOHN HEWITT, Jr.
JOSEPH B. TAYLOR,
ANDREW CLARK,
LEMUEL W. PARKES,
WILLIAM TOOPER,
Committee.

Mr. CHARLES DAVIES spoke in favor of the resolutions.

Mr. JAMES CONNEL thought the resolutions reflected on the present Police organization of the City whom they—he spoke to them all, Republicans, Know-Nothings, Democrats—had put in power. He was against the resolutions.

Dr. KENNEDY spoke in opposition to the resolutions. The laws of the City were sufficient for our protection if faithfully administered.

J. D. WILLIAMSON, Esq., WILLIAM RUSSELL, Esq., and others, spoke for and against the resolutions, which, with the rest of the report, were finally adopted.

The following gentlemen were appointed a Committee to enroll members: L. W. Parkes, John Hewitt, Jr., Andrew Clark, Alexander Young, William Knapp.

The meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the Chairman. It was large and enthusiastic.

DROWNED WHILE BATHING.—A number of young men went in to bathe on Sunday evening, at the foot of King-street, North River. After the party had swam about some time, they missed one of their number, —— McGINNISS, aged 20 years. They sought for him in all directions, but could not find him. Thinking he might have gone ashore unobserved, they sought the pier and there found his clothes, as he had left them before going into the water, and those who were standing on the pier, declared that none of the swimmers had left the water. The body of McGINNIS was then sought for with drags, but it had not been recovered up to a late hour last night. It is supposed that McGINNISS was taken with cramps which caused him to sink suddenly and before he could cry for aid. He resided in Howard-street, Brooklyn, and had come to New-York with several other young men to spend the day.

The State Department has been officially advised of the passage of an act by the Venezuelan Congress, imposing an additional or subsidiary contribution of 10 per cent, upon the duties collected at the various Custom-Houses of the Republic from and after the 1st of July last.

Information has been received of the breaking out of small-pox among the Kickapoo Kansas Indians. Eight of them had died. Prompt measures had been taken to arrest the progress of the disease, and physicians had been employed to vaccinate each member of the tribe.

Gen. HENNINGSEN left to-day for the South.

Judge MASON to-day retired from the office of Commissioner of Patents. SAMUEL T. SHUGERT, the Chief Clerk, will act in his place until his successor is appointed.

On Friday evening Lewisburg, Va., and the vicinity only, were visited by a hailstorm, which for violence and destructiveness is without precedent in that part of the country. The whole vegetable and growing crops were nearly annihilated. Some of the hailstones measured five inches in circumference.

The New Orleans mail did not arrive to-day.

No despatches from New Orleans have been received by the seaboard line since Thursday.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Aug. 2, 1857.

Some facts have come to my knowledge recently which should be presented to the public for their perusal, that they may understand the operation of the "patent thrust" game, by which honest, faithful and capable public servants are sometimes pushed out of official position, in order that private schemes, which they refuse to countenance, may be promoted at the expense of justice and the public good. The case in hand furnishes one more evidence of the melancholy fact, that the easiest way to get along in any position bringing one in collision with the selfish interests of one's fellows, is by securing plentiful elasticity of conscience, colluding with the rogues who would filch from the public crib, and sharing with them the ill-gotten spoil.

If a man will do this skillfully and with caution, he may expect the widest popularity and a never failing commission. Let him pursue the opposite course, preserve his integrity, denounce corruption or malfeasance, or refuse to share in the rascality and the plunder, and he is sure to be himself denounced, accused of all that is infamous, and in all probability will find himself an official head shorter, under circumstances implying that he had been faithful to his trust. In other words, a man here, whether in office or in the field, is sure of an unenviable reputation, just in proportion as he least deserves it. You may deem this strong language, and perhaps it is; but the following statement of the services of the present Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy, and the devices at work to secure his displacement, will sufficiently justify the application of such language, at least in some instances.

DANIEL B. MARTIN began his career thirty years ago, under ROBT. L. STEVENS, with whom he served fifteen years, assisting in the numerous and extensive experiments made by that gentleman in steam engineering. A close observer, and practical mechanic, he then laid the foundation of a reputation for skill and thoroughness in his profession, which years ago ranked him among the most accomplished and experienced Engineers in the United States. He was appointed Engineer-in-Chief of the Navy by Mr. DOBBIN, without the aid of political influence, and solely because of his acknowledged capability. New-York mechanics know him well, and are proud of him as a worthy member of their own fraternity, who by merit alone has attained enviable eminence. While Mr. MARTIN was still in the ranks of the Navy as simple engineer, and before his elevation to the Chiefship, Mr. COLLINS sought his services temporarily from the Government for a few trips during which he desired to establish the fact that American steam ships could struggle successfully with those of Europe for the empire of the seas. He was placed first in charge of the Arctic, and subsequently of the Pacific, each of which vessels under his engineering accomplished their most rapid passages, greatly to the gratification of the whole country.

When Congress ordered the construction of six first-class steam frigates, Mr. MARTIN was head of the Board whose province it was to decide upon the plans and specifications for their machinery. The engines of the Minnesota were constructed at the Washington Navy Yard under his sole direction, and the boilers of all the new frigates were made after a design which originated with Mr. MARTIN. The Board of Engineers alluded to above consisted of Mr. MARTIN, and Messrs. EVERETT, COPELAND, WOOD and LENTHALL, the latter being United States Naval Constructor. The Board was besieged, while sitting, by an army of persons from New-York and Pennsylvania, the inventors or patentees of various alleged improvements in steam machinery, each of whom desired the Government to adopt his invention and make his fortune. Among the things pressed upon their attention was a patent "Thrust," for the shafts of steam propellers, owned in part by the proprietor of a certain Philadelphia newspaper, who relied for success as much, perhaps, on the political services of his journal, as the merits claimed for his patent. Secretary DOBBIN, however, was not very susceptible to such influences. He was strongly importuned to order the patent "Thrust" put on board the entire six new frigates, the proprietor meanwhile refusing to name a price which the Government should pay for the use of his invention. At last the Secretary consented to try the alleged improvement upon the Wabash and Minnesota,—for which in all probability the owner will some day be demanding an hundred thousand dollars or so of Government. The failure to apply the thrust on all the frigates was attributed to the opposition of Mr. MARTIN, who wished for the adoption of his own. New forms of propellers, [illegible] and all manner of [illegible] in the government, were urged upon the attention of the Engineer Board, and it was not deemed good policy, to use the language applied, as it was not deemed good policy, to venture the new ships, to risk their success by experimenting on the hull of patentees.

It followed, of course, that the disappointed applicants were speedily arrayed in hostility to Mr. MARTIN; and many of them have ever since been busy in efforts to contest his influence in the Department. As left they have trumped up charges against him, which he is not permitted to see, and upon which they are now seeking to procure his peremptory removal. Mr. BUCHANAN, however, has promised to see them properly investigated, which I hope he will doubtless will fully establish their baselessness. Among and cooperating with the rejected Patentees, are several Engineers,—one of whom is at present the incumbent of three lucrative offices under the Government, and has a whole office full of patent rights of his own. Envious of Mr. MARTIN's position, and jealous that he cannot be used to promote their projects or projects, there have also conspired for years past to throw of the Cerberus who [illegible] against their speculations. Had to have a competent tool in the hands of those men, who believed that such a combination would have risen up against him, or that he would to-day be poorer than on the day of his entering the public service?

Again,—a certain New-York Coal Company, some of whose members were formerly connected with a Southern iron foundry, have taken a very active part in seeking the removal of MARTIN, because in his contracts the Department [illegible] the use of our fleet, [illegible] interested parties have had a strong [illegible] by the Department. Mr. MARTIN, if he [illegible] to be removed, Mr. [illegible] [illegible] Department [illegible] [illegible] trouble for the speculators, and lead to an [illegible] exposure.

The leader of the Coal Company ring of the combination is discovered to be on peculiarly intimate terms with Senator CAMERON—a gentleman, in certain partisan eyes, than even official delinquency would be. It turns out, too, that the Coal Company had a candidate, the Patent "Thrust" newspaper man one, and nearly every other member of the clique one of his own,—each of whom was assured that his particular chances were the best for the place. By this management all were kept quiet, while the combination were engaged in pushing their joint candidate, Mr. GEORGE SUMNER. The mischief which has already sprung out of an exposure of this systematic duplicity bids fair to verify the adage that "when rogues fall out, honest men get their dues."

One of the charges understood to have been filed against Mr. MARTIN is, that he used his influence in the new frigates. That is so; but he has sought no personal advantage from their use, and experience has demonstrated their superiority and economy. Mr. COLLINS has practically indorsed them by putting them into the Adriatic, and an Engineer-in-Chief may be excused for giving the Government the benefit of any improvement which commands the confidence of private capital and skill.

The foregoing statement is sufficient to expose the influences which are at work to injure a faithful public officer, and deprive the Government of his services. If the facts are all carefully and properly considered in the right quarters, these machinations will result in Mr. MARTIN's signal triumph over his enemies, and a rebuke will be administered to trading politicians and corrupt cliques, well calculated to encourage public officers in observing their oaths to serve the Government with independence and faithfulness. It is due to Mr. MARTIN to say that I have had no communication with him upon this subject, directly or indirectly. I.

The Persia's News.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., Sunday, Aug. 2—8 P. M.

The steamer Victoria which left this port on Friday last for the purpose of intercepting the Cunard steamship Persia, on her passage from Liverpool to New-York, has returned. She reports a thick fog off Cape Race, and consequently no sight of the Persia, which has now doubtless passed that point. The effort to get her news in advance, unsuccessful unless the ice case containing it has been picked up by some fishermen, in which case her advices may yet be received in season to anticipate her arrival at New-York.

PARIS GOSSIP.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times:

PARIS, Tuesday, July 14, 1857.

[illegible] I return again to the [illegible] French election. It appears that the [illegible] not only astonished, but highly displeased the Minister of Interior [illegible] to show to His Majesty and the [illegible] there is nothing alarming for the security [illegible] Government in this result, but promised to [illegible] table of the election throughout the country. As a preface to this table, which we have here in a day or two, the Minister has published [illegible] which gives the total of votes at the various elections since the Republic of [illegible] table, which will be found below, looks [illegible] for the Government—but it ignores [illegible] which forms the whole [illegible] The total of opposition votes [illegible] and these votes cast, as they are almost exclusively in the large cities, in the [illegible] the country, in the cities from [illegible] in the cities in the which are [illegible] by their number a permanent revolutionary [illegible] For in France there is no [illegible] opposition; an opposition vote is [illegible] a revolutionary vote; there is no [illegible] of the Government strongly attached [illegible] the opposition votes were [illegible] the votes of [illegible] individuals [illegible] would gladly see the Government overturned [illegible] and they much than equal in number in [illegible] the friends of the Government. The [illegible] of the people of France, outside of Paris, have no [illegible] influence in staging a revolution, or in giving stability to the Government, than if they were [illegible] of the Polynesian Islands. All France, the [illegible] people, for good people, is concentrated in Paris; beyond its walls there is nothing. This important detail, therefore, does not appear in the following table of the Minister, published in the Moniteur:

[illegible] of the Government [illegible] of universal suffrage [illegible] the composition of the Legislative Assembly [illegible] fully to satisfy the friends of [illegible] and of the [illegible] who [illegible] much it reports to the glory and the permanency of France to keep a strong and popular Government. In the course of eight years the number of dissidents, far from increasing, have diminished; the votes which they have had the liberty to make during the last election has neither augmented their number, nor masked their impotency. The country, which has five times judged them, has not changed its opinion."

During the twenty days which constitutes, according to the electoral law, the period of preparation for the vote, the most complete liberty has been left to the citizens to bring forward and support their candidates, and to the journals to publish their names and discuss their merits. But now that the contest is terminated and that an immense majority of more than 6,000,000 of suffrages has clearly proved the sentiments of the country, there ought to be a cessation of the discussion; which for the future can have no other effect than that of uselessly agitating the public mind.

It is not worth while to point out the fallacies of these statements of the Moniteur. They are too palpable to need comment.

The incident of the election which most displeased the Emperor, was the success of CAVAIGNAC. He would sooner have been brought face to face with any other man in the Empire than with his hated rival of '48. He will only be too glad if CAVAIGNAC refuses to take the oath.

In one of the cities visited by the Emperor during the scandalous of last year, a visit that is represented on the Exhibition of this year by a picture in which the whole population is falling at his Majesty's feet, the vote stood, at the supplementary election, 11,268 for the Government, 10,261 against, with more abstentions than votes. This was the city of Angers.

The impression produced on the public mind by the rigors exercised on the press at the close of the election, has been unfavorable to the Government. These rigors can measure at the same time demonstrate the Government's own appreciation of the situation of affairs, and they offer a marked comment upon the quotation made above from the Moniteur, on the "perfect liberty" that was left to the electors and journals during the duration of the contest. The day that the Moniteur published the above article, all the journals were forced to cease from that moment to speak of the election at all. The Moniteur certainly did not say they must cease; it said the time had come to cease, and that was enough.

The attempted revolution in Italy has again brought to the public attention the Murat'ist question. I have never been able to ascertain the real sentiments of the French Government on this question. It would seem at first sight that the Emperor, fond as he is of following the souvenirs of his uncle, would favor the accession of his cousin Murat to the throne of his father. But would it be policy? The friends of NAPOLEON say that he opposes the measure as likely to isolate him from other governments of Europe, and par toutant from that of England, which is violently opposed to it. It is true that the Morning Post has been gained to the Murat cause; but, notwithstanding this journal passes for the official organ of the cabinet, or at least of its chief, the English Government would have a good deal to do if it held itself responsible for all the vagaries, all the declamations of this journal. The Prince MURAT himself is permitted by the Emperor to carry on his propagandism, and to reside (at a locality in Savoy) which facilitates his object; but the French Government, interrogated upon this point, officially denies that it favors the project.

The Sardinian Government pretends to oppose the introduction, and no doubt sincerely, of any foreign dynasty to the throne of Naples; but at the same time we find at Genoa a journal devoted to this cause, entitled L'Italie, Revue Politique, Industrielle et Littéraire. This journal lately published an article headed in large capitals, "The new King, Murat will be an honestly Constitutional King," and in which it is said: "It is too generally believed that the Prince LUCIEN MURAT will refuse to the Neapolitans a Constitution and liberty. Error! The son of JOACHIM MURAT has declared, only a few days ago, and we can furnish the proof thereof, that he should always wish that the kingdom of Naples should enjoy at least the same degree of liberty as free Piedmont; and absolutism in Southern Italy will never have a bruder adversary than the Prince, if destiny is fulfilled. Let the Neapolitan people, therefore, declare themselves," &c.

It is scarcely possible that the present King of Naples, in the actual state of the public mind in his kingdom, can very long escape the assassin's hand; his life is much more uncertain than that of NAPOLEON; and it is scarcely possible that Italy will be declared republican. The chances are, therefore, very strong that Lucien MURAT and his wife may ascend the throne of Naples before the lapse of many months, and these will not be the first sovereigns given to Europe by the little State of New-Jersey.

The sudden departure of the Empress to Plombières on Thursday last, produced a singular effect on the public mind at Paris. All sorts of conjectures were put in circulation, but the one which took precedence was a pretended confirmation of the report that the Emperor had been shot at at Plombières. Her Majesty remained three days and returned to St. Cloud yesterday, for as the public still in ignorance of the real motive of the journey, the report was taken for truth. It is not at all improbable that [illegible] the dangers that surrounded the Emperor at this moment. The arrest of Orsini, [illegible] Italians, and not an Italian arrives in Paris at this moment who is not the object of an active surveillance. M. PIETRI, the Prefect of Police, I am told, was never so busy since his accession to his present office. The trial of the Italians arrested as the principals in the conspiracy against the Emperor's life, will come on, I am a few journals this fortnight.

The heat that just now reigns in Paris, sacrilegiously called by one of its talented writers, Enfer chambre de Fenfer, is at the maximum of 94°, which you will allow is not bad in a latitude of 48° north. The natural mildness of the climate contributes to an equalization of the general heat, and one does not suffer so much as from the same thermometrical heat of New-York, for the reason that there the air is dry and piercing, whether in heat or cold; your winds come from off a vast continent lying west of you, loaded with the dry air peculiar to the earth; whereas, at Paris, the air always comes from the ocean, and is always surcharged with more or less of vapor. This vapor modifies the sun's rays of Summer and the freezing cold of Winter, and obviates those sudden changes from heat to cold, so peculiar to the Atlantic States. Moreover, the city of Paris has the advantage of being built exclusively of stone; and living here, with a still lively recollection of the effect of a 94° sun falling on the brick walls of New-York, and converting the whole city into a suffocating furnace, I can only wonder that, during the obstacle, the place is not entirely deserted—especially, since all around it are the finest retreats for coolness and comfort in the world. A very common experiment explains all these hygrometrical differences between the two countries. Clothes that are hung out to dry, all things being equal, require, in France, just twice as long an exposure as in the United States. No experiment could be more conclusive than this in explaining the atmospheric phenomena that are observed in the two countries.

Whether it is the effects of the diabolic heat that reigns, or some other inappreciable phenomenon in the life of that strange individual Hume, it is yet true that he professes to have recovered his powers again, or to use his own expression, has fallen again under the power of the spirits. This relapse is the despair of his father confessor, the Père DE RAVIGNON, for you perhaps know that Hume sometime ago connected himself with the Catholic Church, and that this conversion was made under the influence of the Père DE RAVIGNON, who has thus become the young man's spiritual director. After the numerous experiments of last Winter at the Palace and in high society at Paris, Hume fell sick or pretended to fall sick, and sent for the father confessor I have just named. The reverend father obtained from the medium a promise to cease forever evoking the spirits of the dead, and a retraction of the mes courses he had been in the habit of practising. This retraction was sent to the Emperor with the expression of a wish, more implied than spoken, that no inducements would be held out to Hume to cause him to fall again into the power of the fausses esprits, for such the celebrated Jesuit believes them to be. But curiosity has gained a victory over the exhortations of the reverend father, and Hume had no sooner announced that his power had returned, than his patrons returned also, and he is now again in the height of his diabolic reputation. He has not left for the Rhine, as was intended. The reason is this man, to those who are not prepared to believe in the diabolicality of his exploits, and fortunately for the credulity of mankind in general, these are in the majority, is an enigma. There is no doubt but that his power all lies in his own cunning and the audacity which he carries into his operations. The message of this man through Paris will form a singular chapter in the history of the French Court of the present day.

Before her departure for Plombières, the Empress, instead of the restraint which is thrown around her by the presence of the Emperor and the etiquette which is de rigeur as long as the Court is officially at Paris, amused herself in various little incognito parties of pleasure, that no doubt served to recall to her the happiness of her younger days. One evening she was noticed in the crowd at the Café Catalan, Bois de Boulogne, on the occasion of one of the fêtes that have now converted that charming spot into the fashionable rendezvous of the city. Her Majesty was attended by several persons of her suite, and by M. Ney, Manager of the "Café," and, when in danger of being recognized, masked her face with her handkerchief. Her Majesty seemed delighted at this liberty from etiquette, and did not complain of those who stepped on her toes by accident, or too rudely elbowed her. A few evenings ago, just as they were commencing the play at the Théâtre-Français, two ladies, in crinoline, followed by a gentleman in a white cravat, were seen in the lobby of the first circle, demanding immediately from the attendants a box. There were none disengaged, and the more the attendants declared the fact, the more one of the ladies seemed disappointed. At the noise of the colloquy in the lobby, a gentleman who occupied one of the front lodges with two fine looking ladies, rose from his seat, and stepping out, exclaimed, "Why, that's the Empress!" In effect, it was Her Majesty, who, in company with the Duke and Duchess DE BASSANO, had conceived the fantaisie of seeing the play and the audience from another point of view, than the eternal official box where, instead of seeing herself, she is posted as a show for the rest. She wanted, for once, to play truant to the official box. How often, indeed, must those placed in similar positions desire to enjoy a little of the repose and the pleasures of the simple bourgeoisie! The gentleman who left his box, and had recognized the Empress, was none other than the well-known journalist, M. FREDERICK GAILLARDET, who was espoused away with his affianced bride, Miss DOMINIQUE, of New-Orleans, and her mother. M. GAILLARDET gallantly offered his box, through the Chamberlain, to Her Majesty, but she thanked him, and finding no other resource, took refuge in the hated imperial box, to stand as a target for the rest of the evening to the single and double-barrelled lorgnettes of the house.

A story is in circulation in Havre in regard to CAPPELLER, which perhaps you may not have heard. It seems that the favorite of M. DE ROTHSCHILD, during his short pilgrimage to the United States, inspired, by what caprice of woman's heart I am unable to tell, a romantic affection in the breast of young Pennsylvanian lady, the daughter of a rich merchant, who has resolved to marry him. Opposed naturally by her parents in so fantastic a project, the young lady, it is said, took to flight, and in imitation of her idol or perhaps ideal, put her hand into the strong box which contained her father's riches, and carried off in advance her share in the paternal heritage. The Fulton on her last trip from New-York to Havre is believed to have brought to France this interesting passenger.

La Patrie, which is generally well-informed on the movements of official persons, announces that in September the Queen of England will make another visit to the Emperor and Empress of France, at Fontainebleau.

Sir COLIN CAMPBELL passed through Paris two days ago, on his way to the East, to take charge of the Bengal army at the seat of the late troubles in that country.

The arrests, in connection with the Italian conspiracy, continue, and it is intended to give great publicity to the trial that will follow these arrests. The Government desires that the power of its police shall be known throughout Europe, and this trial will be seized as an occasion to show this power, and at the same time its issue will be intended as an example to other well-disposed persons.

MALAKOFF.

SELLING GOODS BY SAMPLE.—An agent of a New-York firm was lately arrested and tried in Portland, Me., for selling goods by sample, in violation of the law of that State, which prohibits any person, not having been for five years a citizen of the State, from traveling from place to place in that State, or from place to place within any city or town within the State, with samples of merchandise, for the purpose of making sale by such samples. An. The defence was that the agent did not "travel from place to place," but opened a room and sold to merchants by sample from thence. The prosecution contended that this was a subterfuge, and that the occupation of a room did not constitute an opening of a warehouse by the defendant, for the disposition of his articles, and therefore he was as much liable as if he had taken samples from "place to place." The Judge sustained the view of the defence, however, and discharged the agent from arrest.

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin complains of great delay in forwarding the European mails from Philadelphia from New-York. Some time ago it was understood that arrangements had been made by which they would be sent on by the very first train after the arrival of a steamer at Jersey City or New-York; but this has rarely been done. At times great inconvenience is caused by this.

GROWTH OF THE NORTHWEST.

Lake Winnebago and Fox River Improvement.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

OSHKOSH, Wis., Friday, July 24, 1857.

The astonishing growth of Central Wisconsin, embracing the Lake Winnebago country and its tributaries, including Fox (or Neenah) and Wolf Rivers, together with Wisconsin River, almost exceeds belief. Having, within the short period of ten years, sprung into importance, this section of the State being now in the most flourishing condition.

The cities and villages of the Lake are Fon-du-Lac, on the south, with its 3,000 inhabitants; Oshkosh, in the centre, with its 6,000 inhabitants; and on the north Neenah, with 3,000 inhabitants; and Menasha, with its 2,500 inhabitants; while on the lower Fox or Neenah River stands the city of Appleton, with its 3,000 inhabitants; and the city of Green Bay, with its 4,000 inhabitants—all being connected by navigable waters, on which run fleet steamers, passing daily from Fon-du-Lac to Green Bay, a distance of 75 miles, about one-half being lake navigation, and the remainder furnished by improvements in Fox River, by means of dams, locks and canals.

The cities and villages on the Fox and Wolf Rivers, most of which are tributary to Oshkosh or Fon-du-Lac, both favorably situated on the shores of Lake Winnebago, are Omro, 12 miles up the Fox River, with its 1,000 inhabitants; Berlin, 25 miles, with its 2,000 inhabitants; Portage City, where mingle the waters of the St. Lawrence and Mississippi Rivers, 75 miles, with its 3,000 inhabitants—all being on the line of the Fox River improvement; while on the Wolf, a navigable tributary of the Fox River, lies Winneconne, 12 miles from Oshkosh, with its 700 inhabitants; Fremont, 25 miles, with 1,000 inhabitants; New-London, 60 miles, with its 2,000 inhabitants; and Shannon, 95 miles, with its 500 inhabitants.

On the upper Wisconsin, also, in a measure tributary to Fon-du-Lac and Oshkosh, for supplies, lies Stevens' Point, 90 miles, with its 2,500 inhabitants; and Wausau, 110 miles, with its 600 inhabitants. Above the points named, on Wolf and Wisconsin Rivers, are immense tracts of pine country, yielding lumber in large quantities, most of which is floated down the stream, and finds its way to Lake Winnebago, and from thence to Eastern or Southern markets, giving profitable employment to a great number of persons, both in lumbering and preparing the logs for market.

The cities destined to become large and important places on Lake Winnebago and Fox or Neenah River, are Fond du-Lac, at the head of the Lake; Oshkosh, at the mouth of the Fox River; also, on the Lake, Appleton, 5 miles below the foot of the lake, situated on the west bank of the river, where is a fall of about 60 feet within the distance of one mile, affording an inexhaustible water-power, being now used to propel a large amount of machinery of different kinds.

The city of Green Bay, lying at the mouth of Fox River, at its entrance into Green Bay, a large and important body of water connecting 90 miles north with Lake Michigan, must increase in a rapid ratio, as this section of country becomes more densely populated. It is the natural outlet for a large region of rich country, lying south and west of Green Bay, upwards of 100 miles in length, it being with Fox River the most southwestern tributary of the St. Lawrence River.

Railroads are in process of construction extending north and west of Fon-du-Lac and Oshkosh toward the head waters of the Fox, the Wolf and the Wisconsin Rivers, which, when completed, will give an impetus to the villages and cities of this part of Wisconsin, about to be determined by future statistics. "Very few persons have a correct idea of the extent and importance of the wilds of that portion of the Upper Wisconsin above Stevens' Point, or of the Upper Wolf, above New-London. And we doubt whether one in a hundred is aware that between Appleton and the Falls of the Chemic, (the proposed route of the Lake Superior Railroad,) is a very extensive country, adapted to grain growing and grazing." The above writer adds, "Can any estimate the amount of trade which would pass over the line of roads above alluded to as soon as they are completed? It is now worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, yet this whole country has just begun to settle. Hurry forward the railroad to Wausau. Push on the railroad to Green Bay. The main trunk to Lake Superior is in good progress."

The Fox River Improvement Company, chartered by the State of Wisconsin, to unite the waters of the Mississippi with those of the Great Lakes, has completed a channel or canal, by which steamers navigating the Upper Mississippi can discharge their cargoes into vessels traversing the inland seas of America and the St. Lawrence River for thousands of miles, thus uniting by water communication the Gulf of Mexico with the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

The Fox River Improvement is divided into two sections. The upper section extending from Portage City, on the Wisconsin, to Oshkosh, situated on Lake Winnebago, is deep, flowing through wide marshes and plains. It needs but little labor to make it navigable. The outlet of the lake is called the Lower Fox or Neenah River, which pours its great volume of water into Green Bay. Its length is 30 miles, falling one hundred and seventy feet in that distance, where are situated seventeen locks of sufficient size to admit the passage of steamers and other lake craft of from 100 to 200 tons burden. COLLEGE FESTIVALS.

Commencement at Williams' College.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS., Friday, July 31, 1857.

This sequestered spot among the mountains rivals, in ease of access, the Valley of Rasselas. Leaving Troy, a railroad ride of an hour and a half, takes us to Hoosic Junction, on the Troy and Boston Railroad. Two miles further we go by a horse-car to Hoosic Falls, then farewell to railroads! The old-fashioned post-coach pounces upon us, and starts on the seventeen-mile journey to Williamstown. The provoking part is the riding near rails not untired by the iron horse, and to have the satisfaction of knowing that in a short time travelers will spin along these same rails, instead of the creeping arrangements we now ride in. Far better were it to wander where railroads never can be built, than in sight of comforts only enjoyable in future. But all ways lead to Rome; at length we arrive at the Academic shrine.

This railroad is the one upon which the Hoosic Tunnel is being bored. About seven miles beyond this place we come to the mountain where the new machine is being constructed, and will be in operation in a short time. The old machine stands on the Boston side of the tunnel—a useless mass—its fault being that it was not quite so hard or strong as the Hoosic mountain. The new, one it is confidently believed, will accomplish all that is promised for it, one precisely similar now in operation in California, boring a hole six feet in diameter at the rate of twenty-six feet a day. The contractors seem confident, and assert that the old one would now be in operation, had the great hardness of the mountain been anticipated and provided for. At the present time the work has been advanced by hand-drilling nearly 1,000 feet into the mountain at which rate it will take twelve years to complete the tunnel, so that should all machines fail, this resource can be made available, and the completion of the Hoosic Tunnel be but a question of time. A visit to the mountain region is a delightful episode in a stay at this seat of learning.

Williamstown is a quiet country village among the Berkshire hills. It can be approached by the way of Pittsfield and Adams, as well as by the way I have mentioned. This gives a longer journey by rail and less staging, but for beauty of scenery gives me the top of a stage-coach, and the valley of the Hoosic to travel through. When the railroad from Adams to Troy is finished, (as the contractors promise it shall be soon, if $100,000 can be raised,) Williams College will be only a mile from it, and would be even closer if the road had been better located. Then will the ancient town be more inviting as a Summer resort. About this time the tunnel will be built, toasts will be given, songs sung, wine drunk, and—poor correspondent will be there to report the proceedings.

Col. EPHRAIM WILLIAMS was the founder of an institution of learning, which has now grown to the present proportions of Williams College. While others were fighting the French and Indians, he had in contemplation the erection of a Free School. He made his will on the 22d of July, 1755, on his way to fight Baron DIESKAU. He seemed to have a foreboding of his fate, for on the 8th of September he fell near Glens Falls. By means of the money left by him for the purpose, a Free School was founded in 1790, and in 1793 the College was incorporated by act of the General Court upon the petition of the trustees. The money left by Col. WILLIAMS, was thought at the time a princely sum, but even that was not enough, and about one thousand pounds was raised by lottery—no sin in those degenerate days. Yet all the honor of the foundation of the College belongs to Col. WILLIAMS, and it seems but proper that a monument should be erected by the Alumni of Williams, to the founder of their Alma Mater. Since that period the College has prospered under the administration of four successive Presidents; outbreaks sometimes have occurred among the students, but in general, a noble army of young men have graduated each year. In 1836 the students, [illegible] of the College [illegible] their support in the war impending with France. President MARK HOPKINS represents a public sentiment.

The disciples of Williams' I very enjoin the students are required to pledge themselves to abstain from intoxicating liquors, but it is a question how the Faculty whether hypocrisy is not as bad as intemperance, and that what is saved at the spirituous spigot is not let out at the mendacious bung-hole.

The approaching Commencement promises to be one of great interest; at least, judging from the programme of exercises and the crowd assembled already. On Sunday, the President, Rev. MARK HOPKINS, D. D., LL. D., will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon in the afternoon; in the evening the Mills Theological Society will be addressed by J. P. THOMPSON, of New-York. On Monday evening Dodsworth's band will give a concert; the day will be spent in visiting Greylock and the places of interest in the vicinity. On Tuesday an oration will be delivered before the Alumni by Rev. WILLIS LORD, and a poem by WILLIAM PITT PALMER. In the evening the Adelphic Union will be addressed by E. P. WHIPPLE. On Wednesday the Commencement exercises will take place; Master's orations will be delivered by JAMES E. DEVEY, of New-York, and NORMAN SEAVER, of Boston. ALEXANDER HUTCHINS, of Peekskill, N. Y., is the Valedictorian. On each and every of these occasions your correspondent will be among them taking notes.

Triennial Celebration at Yale.

NEW-HAVEN, Saturday, Aug. 1, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

DEAR SIR: In your issue of yesterday, your special correspondent in New-Haven states that the southern members of the class of 1854 are generally absent from the triennial celebration of this class, "having sent their regrets with a damnation for Yale College and its Abolition friends." That they are absent, in true, as has been the case by accident at similar celebrations of other classes in years gone by. But it is by no means proven that they are absent by concerted design; and the statement that they have sent their regrets "with a damnation for Yale College and the Abolition friends," is unknown.

Yours, respectfully, M. N. WHITMORE,
Secretary to Yale Class of 1854.

American Racers in England.

(From Another Resident Englishman.)

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I perused in your journal of the middle of last week a leading article on the subject of "The American Horses" in England, in which are included some well merited strictures on the treatment they have received from the English handicappers, and in your paper of Saturday I find a long letter from "A Resident Englishman," displaying a considerable amount of the prejudice and obstinacy for which his countrymen are proverbially celebrated. I, too, am a "Resident Englishman," and an old racing man (a contemporary of the Peelishes, the Heathcots, the Thornhills and other turf luminaries, whose memories all English sporting men delight to honor, but I trust I am too great a lover of fair play not to be above admitting the truth, even when it tells against my countrymen, and sufficiently devoid of prejudice to enable me to see an act of injustice and characterize it by its proper name.

Your correspondent is perfectly correct in his description of the preliminary conditions connected with the race, method of entry, supposed plan of apportioning the weights, &c., &c. Also, that the gentlemen [illegible] TOWNSEND, &c., [illegible] "real, good horses, [illegible] I know well,) are "not, good horses, [illegible] can be in his own sense. If to either of these gentlemen can be charged the making of this handicap, the Adjudicator is amenable to censure for having been guilty of an amount of error, and display of unfairness never previously exhibited, (to my knowledge,) on the English turf. In proof of which I challenge "A Resident Englishman" to produce one any English handicap, of any year prior to the present, in which any foreign-bred horse has been so unfairly treated—by being laden down with weight—as are Pryor and Prioress in this same "Ebor Handicap."

He says that a record is kept of the performances of every horse in England, and the comparative ages, weights, distances, and time of the performers,—as also, that the Mowing about an animal's capabilities, and the money invested on him prior to the affixing of weights, is taken into consideration by the Handicapper. But he does not tell your readers, as he should, that the English Jocky Club refuses to ignore all the performances which have not taken place on the English Turf—and that in the record from which an estimate of the abilities of each candidate is formed, no count is kept of foreign running, foreign winnings or foreign losings—and that as neither Pryor nor Prioress had, at the period when the Ebor Handicaps weights were published, appeared on the English turf, they were entitled, in accordance with English rules, to be treated as maiden horses, and weighted as such, instead of being placed at the head of some of the most redoubtable champions of the English turf and give weight to animals any one of whom English sporting writers have asserted are able to give either of the Americans as much as 14 pounds weight, and distance them.

But even admitting that their American performances are entitled to, and have been made to count against them, the charge of unfairness remains the same, for when compared with the English performances of such animals as Fisherman, Pole Star, Pretty Boy, Melissa, and two or three others, engaged in the race—there is nothing in the performances of the American horses that warrants their being made to give such horses (taking respective ages into consideration) lumps of weight—or to place Pryor at once at the head of the list of all weights and ages, and that too for a description of race in which his abilities had never previously been tested. The injustice regarding Prioress is equally great.

A four year old mare is made to give a horse of the same year, who is a first-rate public performer (Pretty Boy) 3 lbs., when had she been equal to him in point of public merit, her sex entitled her to an allowance of 4 lbs. from him. Were no other needed, the running this season of the horses I have named, and others to whom the American horses are made to give weight, would prove an all-sufficient commentary on the injustice of this handicap—and bear you out, as well as Porter's Spirit, in the strictures you have felt called on to make regarding what appears to be a strong case of injustice.

Your "Resident Englishman" says, and truly, "The American horses have never before run in England." So much the greater reason why something like courtesy should be shown them and their owners; and if anything in the shape of favoritism was to be displayed, one would have supposed the high chivalric feeling which once animated the members of the English Turf would have induced the extension of any slight advantage rather to them, than placing them at a great and heavy disadvantage—in a species of race to which they are unaccustomed, and in a climate and on a kind of track to which they are strangers. The English horses are at home, are bred and trained for short single dashes, and not heat races; whereas Pryor and Prioress have traveled between three and four thousand miles to meet them, have been accustomed only to long and repeated trials of speed and endurance—and those on a perfectly level track, devoid of grass; whereas they have now to run on turf, and over undulating ground, which must inevitably make a serious difference to any American horse.

Again he says—and lays much stress on the assertion—that the American horses were taken over, their performances on this side exhibited in proof of what they could do, and an offer made to match them against anything England could produce, for a race of four mile heats, (not a single dash of a mile or two,) which offer, to the disgrace of England, was not accepted. I feel ashamed to say, England, with her thousand or two racers, could not find one to space, to meet the Americans, and take up the gauntlet so gallantly thrown down. It is but a sorry excuse to say the owners of English horses had none of their good ones at a "loose end," to take up the challenge, for, I believe Mr. TED BRONCK offered to make the stake sufficiently heavy to tempt any owner of a good horse to put an animal in training expressly for the event; and out of a dozen that might have been selected, including the redoubtable Fisherman, there is not one whose winnings, at the end of the present season, will amount to the sum he might have cleared by beating Pryor or Priorress, to say nothing of the glory which would have attended such a victory. Besides according to our own English writers, it did not require a first rate horse to beat either of the Americans; a mere "leg-then-dapper" would do, and heaven knows we have an abundance of animals of this class, whose owners would gladly get rid of them for an hundred, or an hundred and fifty pounds,—and who continually place them in racing stables where they can be claimed for a trifling sum, which are notoriously [illegible] which are other [illegible] and every [illegible]

So, the [illegible] which is so good against the [illegible] to compete with American horses in such races as four-mile heats—the majority of our fliers exhibit symptoms of distress at the end of a one year of age and a half, or three quarter and by the end of a second four-mile heat, they would be dead beaten. Our method of training is bad, sadness to the development of enduring qualities, a great turn of speed for a short distance, and the ability to enable a brilliant finish at the end of a waiting race is all we seem to care about now-a-days.

ANOTHER RESIDENT ENGLISHMAN.

Our Horses in Bentonia.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: I think no stronger illustration need be asked for of how idle—to use an homely phrase—a man will talk and write when he talks and writes against truth and fairness, than is presented by "A Resident Englishman" in the Times of Saturday. The charge of unfairness towards our horses now in England has been made on this side the water. A "Resident Englishman" occupies nearly a column of your paper in fine type to refute this charge; yet from beginning to end it does not contain a single fact to oppose to the charge, nor an attempt at one. It is all "chaff." Our horses are entered for the "Goodwood Cup." Has there been a word said by us against the fairness of that race? Not one. And why? Because it has put in practice its professions. It treats Pryor and Priorress as "great" horses—which have never run in England—and shows thus its friends in favor of foreign horses. In the "Ebor Handicap" which professes to be governed by the same rules in this respect, we find all these concessions thrown to the winds. Nor do they stop there. Mr. TED BRONCK, when he first arrived in England, challenged any horse in the country against Pryor, for £5,000—$25,000—in a four mile heat. There was no horse in England "at loose ends" that saw fit to take up the challenge; but we were assured by the English press that when they did find some "old leather flapper" "at loose ends" they wanted to take the price out of us. Mr. TED BRONCK, however, must be punished for his temerity, and so we find his gallant little horse loaded down with baggage beyond any other horse in the race. Pryor, five years old, and a small horse, is made to head a list of 32, wherein figure older and larger horses, several of whom are reckoned the most formidable horses in England; Priorress coming fourth, although there are many whose age and sex and performance on the English turf, should put them in her place. The only show "A Resident Englishman" makes of the fairness of all this, is that the handicapper "must take into consideration the history upon a horse's capabilities, and the money invested upon him previous to the weight being fixed." This might apply to English horses, and horses which were not "great" in English turf, but could not to the American horses entered at this race, as they had never run in England, and the handicapper is not to take into consideration what they have done out of England; and furthermore, that no one had fixed every offered that neither of them would run the "Goodwood Cup," which was previous to the weights for the Ebor being fixed.

Look at the Ebor race in any light you please, Mr. Editor, and the more the more "fudging" towards our horses will continually present itself. In not one single respect has the English handicapper abided by his creed. A NATURALIZED IRISHMAN.

Celt and Saxon.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

SIR: Accept my thanks for the space which you have courteously afforded to my reply to "An Anglo-Saxon" and "Anglo-Saxon." Always have those who appear, who boast themselves "Saxon and Celt," with your permission I will say, with "Celt and Saxon"—Celt, first, if you please.

"An American" evidently knows nothing of the nature of historical evidence. The Anglo Saxons were a piratical confederacy composed of several distinct races. Their language was varied and uncertain. (See introduction to Dr. Johnson's dictionary.) Their early history was mythical, as MACAULAY shows. "An Anglo-Saxon might be anything provided he were a pirate." (See Dr. LATHAM'S Ethnology of the British Islands.) There is, therefore, no ethnological meaning of the word Anglo-Saxon. It is used in the same sense that we call Negroes, Guinea, Welsh or Irish Americans, because born on the soil. "An American" is wrong in assuming that the great men whom he calls Anglo-Saxons were Goths, not Celts. The Norman French masters of the English sort despised to mingle with the enslaved nation. (See MACAULAY.) The TALBOTS, NEVILLES, PERCYS, &c., were French, intermarried with Irish and Scotch families.

I said that many of the inferior Irish are descended from the English slaves, who were formerly the chained and branded white niggers of the British Islands, bought and sold in the Irish markets. "An American," intending to be dreadfully sarcastic, asks if these Irish are descended from the great English, including Cardinal WOLSEY and St. THOMAS A'BECKET? I should say not, seeing that those two lived and died in celibacy. Cardinal WOLSEY was as little of a Saxon as St. THOMAS, whose father was of French origin and whose mother was a Syrian.

"An American" is equally unhappy in his other examples of Saxons. NEWTON was of Scotch origin; so was BYRON. MILTON was physically and morally a purer Celt than the Irishman CROMWELL, whose father was a Welshman and whose mother was a Stuart. The Celtic temperament is as well marked by nature that he cannot dissemble, he could never be mistaken for anything but a Celt—fair and dark-haired, dark-eyed, small, over-strung type, which is farthest removed from the model of the Saxon Goth.

Before giving an advice to "Study Anglo," this American should read more Blackwell, and before coming out "to have his recorded opinion," he should know a little of the subject on which he pronounces so dogmatically. An American will find in biography that the prominent men in American history were of Celtic origin, from Sparks, Bancroft, Webster, Clay, Calhoun, and the other Celtic peers of the west side of England. The more dark, over-strung Celts of Kent also, such their shares, not to speak of Scotch and Irish and Celto-Germans, who are strongly distinguished from the broad, square-headed, white-haired Goths.

I do not complain that your Saxo-Goths correspondents are abusive, but that they are illogical. I do not see any mortal sin in an Irish abilities. It is more manly than the murderous knife or saxe, from which the Saxons get their disgraceful name. "An American" argues thus: The Irish are birds of ill omen, drunkards, ruffians, "with lost instincts, and grovelling humanity," ergo the Americans are Anglo Saxons. This is not logic, nor sense; humanity does not grovel. I have asked for proof of the existence of an Anglo-Saxon race in America, and the answer is an abuse of the Irish, whose blood has, from the beginning of colonization mixed largely with the other settlers.

SAXONY SAXE GOTHA, lately permitted to call himself a member of the royal family, of which he is the sire, is called Royal Highness and Field-Marshal. He stays at home, and roars, "Victory! gory to the SAXE GOTHA," while Sir COLIN CAMPBELL, and Sir PATRICK GRANT, and the rest of the Celts, do the work, and are impudently called "English," as a reward for their genius and valor. Seeing that the chief nations of the world are at the present day ruled by Celts, BUCHANAN, NAPOLEON, and PALMERSTON, this Anglo Saxon bombast is merely ridiculous.

An attack upon the Irish, who were robbed and denied education by British penal laws, does not answer my query. Where are the Anglo-Saxons in America? The Celts may be a very wicked race, nevertheless they are the progenitors of Americans; and this could be easily and satisfactorily proved in space more available than your valuable columns. Yours, respectfully, AN IRISHMAN.

New-York and New-Haven Railroad.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

It is known to those who are obliged to use the New-Haven Railroad that the depôt has been removed from Canal-street to Twenty-seventh-street, and that no provision has been made to transport passengers through the City. It is well known this Company obtained a charter from our Legislature giving the applicants certain privileges for certain considerations. Among those privileges was the right of way through the State and into the City for the accommodation of its inhabitants. For a long time, indeed from its very origin, passengers have been conveyed into the heart of the City, which, without doubt, was an essential convenience, not alone to the inhabitants of the City, but as well for the benefit of all persons passing through it. The Company have now come to the determination that they will no longer be at the expense of landing passengers at Canal-street, but will have them on the outskirts of the City. The Company may say that it is too expensive to extend their line to Canal-street or the City Hall. They can with as much propriety say that it is too expensive to extend their travel below Harlem Bridge.

Are we to understand that this great monopoly is to deprive the public of rights which as clearly belong to them as any other right which is undisputed?

We cannot think that the thousands who have and are yet willing to travel on this road will submit to this imposition. The truth is that this Company is most miserably managed, and they may yet find out that more than one corporation can be profitably interfered with by the Legislature.

A COMMUTER.

Falling of a Warehouse in St. Louis—Two Men Fatally Injured.

From the St. Louis Intelligencer, July 31.

The neighborhood of Second and Green streets, was thronged last evening with persons from curiosity, attracted by the sudden falling of the front portion of the warehouse of Messrs. Hanson & Gaty, on the corner of the street. The casualty occurred at 11½ o'clock, while those connected with the establishment were engaged in their business duties. Three men were engaged or working of the accident. It occurred in an instant and before even the foreman, who was in the ground floor near the front door, could make his escape. The warehouse is situated in what is known as "The Merchants' Row," two second-street, but was occupied by Messrs. Gaty and Hanson as a paper warehouse. BLAKELEY, the well-known manufacturer and vendor of patent medicines, occupied the two upper stories. Commercial Gazette, a newspaper, one of the partners

An Interesting Law Case Decided—A Public House Closed by Injunction.

Messrs. Lizar & Whitney, proprietors of Lovejoy's Hotel, obtained a decree on Friday against Patrick H. Fallon, who claimed to be the lessee or proprietor of a public house at No. 160 Greenwich-street, know as the "Lovejoy House." This place was opened about eighteen months since, by the parties above-named, and was designated as the "Lovejoy House;" a conspicuous sign being placed upon the house, marriages performed on which the same sign was painted, and every effort made to identify the establishment with the establishment of Lovejoy. Some time since, runners were daily calling at Lovejoy's Hotel, corner of Park-row and Beekman-street, making loud complaints of being invigled into a place in Greenwich-street, where various outrages were practiced upon them; in some cases being set upon by bullies, and only that to pay five or six dollars in order to get possession of their baggage, and for the privilege of escaping from the premises, after making the discovery that they had been fraudulently deceived, and carried to a house hotel under the guise of Lovejoy's. These persons generally came to the City on their way to California, or upon business, with the intention of putting up at the old Lovejoy's Hotel, corner of Park-row and Beekman-street. They had cards of direction, or were recommended there by friends, and were wont to join the mate-s and to fall into the hands of runners, who lay in wait for them at the depots or steamboats, and always had a carriage in waiting to take them and their baggage to the hotel of their choice. Being driven up to the door, these victims, with their baggage, were hurried into the office, and, before they could look about them to see where they were, their baggage was in the possession of the clerk who stood behind the bar with pen in hand, to write their names, or after each new comer the clerks to do it himself in the formidable register spread out before him. Persons familiar with City localities, or who had ever been to Lovejoy's would stop at the door and refuse to enter the den; but strangers would generally part with their baggage, and get their names down before they discovered they were being victimized. The presence of a half dozen hang-dog looking ducks lounging in the place and a certain suspicious air about the whole concern would usually suggest a query to the mind of the stranger whether the slovenly-looking hole they were in could possibly be the fine hotel to which they were recommended by their friends, and so a series of prime questions would be put to the clerk, somewhat as follows:

STRANGER.—I was advised by my friend Brown, who stopped at Lovejoy's Hotel on his way home from California, to go to that House. Do you call this Lovejoy's Hotel?

CLERK.—Yes, sir; this is the only place of that name in New-York.

STRANGER (taking another view, and looking dubious).—Are you quite certain there is no other Lovejoy's Hotel in this City? There must be some mistake, I think.

CLERK.—Don't you 'spose I know? There was another, but 'tis shut up, and all their boarders now stop here?

STRANGER.—Well, I guess I'd take my baggage, and look round a little. I wish to be a little more central on account of business, and if I don't get suited I'll come back.

CLERK.—You can't leave without paying your bill, which is two dollars and fifty cents for one days' board.

STRANGER.—But I've had no board, or room, and haven't been in your house ten minutes, and I wish to leave.

Sovereign he takes his valise, and moves for the door, but a word from the clerk bring the bullies in the room about him; he is seized, the door is shut, and he finds himself literally in the hands of the Philistines. His valise is wrenched out of his hand, or he is threatened with violence, or perhaps knocked down at once. On coming fully to his senses, he is given to understand that the bill is now five dollars or seven, as the case may be, the additional charge being for services, back fire, or something else, and he has no alternative but to fight a half dozen bullies, jump out of the window—if he can—or pay what is demanded. In a majority of cases the latter course is decided to be the cheapest, he pays over the money and gets away, glad to escape with his life.

The hotel business, it is alleged, was not the object aimed at so much as to have a convenient house from which their California and other passengers could be directed to the various bogus ticket offices.

The suit named above was commenced by an application to the Superior Court, for an injunction to restrain these parties from the use of the name of Lovejoy, in this kind of business. The plaintiffs set up that such use of the name was an infringement of their trade-mark; that, aside from the fact that the name of one of these defendants is "Lovejoy," the plaintiffs, in consideration of their early appropriation of the name, as descriptive of their own hotel—of the trouble and expense which they and their grantees have been at, through a long series of years, to identify that name with their hotel—and of the present value and importance of their business—are clearly entitled to the relief sought.

In the consideration of this question, the Court will proceed

"Upon the ground that the complainant has a valuable interest in the good-will of his trade or business; and that, having appropriated to himself a particular name, by which the customers of his business at a particular place, he is entitled to protection against any other person who attempts to pirate upon the good will of the complainant's friends or customers, or the patrons of his trade or business, by using his trade-mark, without his authority or consent." (Partridge vs. Menck, 2 Barb. Ch. Rep., 77.)

"Where manufacturers adopt and affix trade-marks and stamps upon articles manufactured by them, they have a right to an exclusive use of such trade-marks, and are entitled to the interposition of a Court of Equity, to enforce such right by a perpetual injunction." (Taylor vs. Carpenter, 11 Paige, 299; Millington vs. Fox, 3 Myl. & Craig's Rep., 338.)

"And the doctrine of trade-marks has been extended to the names of hotels." (Howard vs. Henriques.)

"The Court will not, in such cases, confine its equitable interference to cases where the mark or sign has been truly and in all respects copied. It is sufficient if the court see that the mark or sign is simulated in such a manner as probably to deceive the customers or patrons of the complainant." (Partridge vs. Menck, 2 Barb. Ch. Rep., 77.)

The defendants, in this case, seem to rely greatly upon the circumstance that the name of one of them is Lovejoy, and claim that that fact entitles him and those united with him in interest in the business, not only as designations of his person, but as descriptive of property belonging or appertaining to him or them.

Plaintiff with all deference submit that the consideration of that question is identical with the consideration of the question how far the simplest and most accidental incident of the accident of birth, will legalize the robbery of a stranger of property rendered valuable and productive, by the energies of his youth and the unceasing labors of years.

MORRIS ELY, of Counsel for Plaintiff.

The difficulty was found to be to secure witnesses from among the multitude who were cognizant of the abuses complained of, as they were generally passing through the City, and were unable to stop to appear in Court and prosecute. Two witnesses, however, were examined to hear case, which furnished the material portion of testimony.

TESTIMONY OF STEPHEN BROWN.

Stephen Brown, one of said witnesses, being duly sworn, in answer to the following interrogatories upon said examination, deposed as follows:

Question.—Where do you reside? Answer.—For the past five years I have resided in the State of California.

Q.—When did you come to the City of New-York? A.—On the 28th of this month in the steamer Illinois.

Q.—When do you intend to leave this State? A.—This afternoon at three o'clock.

Q.—Will you be here on the trial of this cause? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you know Libby & Whitney, the plaintiffs in this suit? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—When you landed here did you intend to stop at a hotel, and if so at what hotel? A.—We intended to stop at Lovejoy's Hotel, for which hotel we had cards.

Q.—When you landed to what hotel did you first go if any? A.—The first hotel we went to was the Lovejoy House.

Q.—How came you to go to that house? A.—A man told us he would show us to Lovejoy's Hotel, and showed us to this house; it looked suspicious after I got in; they asked me why I did not go in to breakfast.

Q.—Whom did you see in that house? A.—There appeared to be five or six whom I saw there whom I did not know.

Q.—Did you have any conversation with any one there about Lovejoy's Hotel? A.—Yes; I told them that was not the Lovejoy's Hotel.

Q.—Whom did you have the conversation with? A.—With persons at the counter.

Q.—Were those men before or behind the counter?

A.—The bar was behind the counter, and I was in the office of the hotel.

Q.—What were those men doing about the house? A.—They seemed to be the owners of the house, and took the money, and appeared to be the bar-keeper; these men took us to the room where we appeared to have joined the company.

Q.—What was the conversation that you had with the man behind the counter? A.—It was about going away; I told him I had cards from that place called the Lovejoy Hotel, and he told me not to let me leave until I had paid; four or five men who surrounded me orders jumped to the door and prevented me from leaving.

Q.—Did he make any reply to you when you told him you had supposed that that was not the Lovejoy's Hotel? A.—He said that was all the Lovejoy's Hotel there was.

Q.—Did you see any sign about or on the house before or after you went in? A.—No, Sir; I noticed particularly upon that the man who conducted us told us.

Q.—After that man conducted you to the house did you see him, and if so where, and what was he doing? A.—I saw him in the house all the time I was there; when we first took us to the house he took us to the man who kept the bar, and they called supper; he was one of the persons who stopped us from going out when the order was given, as I have already stated.

Q.—How long were you there at that house? A.—Should not think we were there over ten minutes.

Q.—Did you have any refreshments in the house? A.—No, nothing.

Q.—Did you have a room in the house? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you have anything done or furnished for you, besides being shown the house as you have stated, in or about the house, or was anything so done or furnished? A.—Nothing.

Q.—Was any payment required of you before leaving the house? A.—I was stopped as I have stated and made to pay two dollars which they said they required for a day's board.

Q.—How many were there in your company? A.—I did not count them, but should think somewhere near a dozen.

Q.—Was Mr. John Weld in that party with you? A.—Yes, Sir.

(The witness here desired to explain that, although there were about a dozen who went from the vessel to that house, but two went in his company—Mr. John Weld and another.)

Q.—Did the same man conduct all three of you. A.—The same man; we were all in company when the man promised to conduct us to Lovejoy's Hotel.

Q.—Where is the house situated at which you were so conducted, what was the street and number? A.—I do not recollect the street and number, as I am a stranger to the City, but recollect distinctly the location of the house, and can easily find it; it is not far distant.

(At this stage of the proceedings counsel for plaintiffs sent the witness to the house spoken of, to ascertain the street and number. To this defendant's counsel objected.)

On his return the examination of said witness proceeded as follows:

Q.—Do you now know the street and number of that house. A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—What is it? A.—Greenwich-street, in the City of New-York, Number 160.

Q.—Have you ever been in this City before? A.—Yes, in Winter of fifty-one, off and on, all Winter.

Q.—Where do you reside now? A.—I reside in California; I intend to go to Massachusetts, and have not made up my mind whether I will return to California.

Q.—You said you intended to stop at the Lovejoy Hotel, and had cards for that hotel—have you those cards here? A.—I have not.

Q.—Who recommended you to the Lovejoy Hotel? A.—Some of the passengers on the steamer, who had been there before.

Q.—Do you know where those passengers are now? A.—I do not; I have not seen any of them since I left the boat; they are scattered; they told me they had stopped there, and it was a good hotel.

Q.—The man who brought you to the Lovejoy House did you address him first, or did he address you first? A.—He addressed us first.

Q.—What did he say when he addressed you? A.—He asked us where we wanted to go; I told him we wanted to go the Lovejoy Hotel; he said he would take us there.

Q.—Did you ride or walk to the house? A.—We walked.

Q.—Were you three the only passengers from that vessel who went to the Lovejoy House? A.—No, Sir; I should think there were a dozen.

Q.—When you left the house, who left with you? A.—All the twelve men.

Q.—Where did they go? A.—They went to the Lovejoy Hotel with me.

Q.—When you came to the Lovejoy House did you write your name in the book. A.—No, Sir; the man behind the counter wrote my name, I believe.

Q.—How long did the other passengers stay who left with you? A.—They arrived before we three, and when we came in they were breakfasting.

Q.—What about the house excited your suspicion, after you got in? A.—One man who sat beside me had two black eyes and was a suspicious looking character; he looked as if he had been fighting, and the behavior of the man who brought us there; there were two or three men there who looked like bullies and had a suspicious appearance; the hotel, also, did not look like the hotel I was looking for; the appearance of the hotel and the persons who were there impressed me unfavorably.

Q.—Are you positive you made no mistake when you addressed the man about the Lovejoy Hotel, and he told you that was the hotel? A.—Yes, Sir; I am positive, for I had one of the cards of the Lovejoy Hotel, and showed it to him, and told him distinctly.

Q.—How happened it that your suspicions were not aroused before you went into the house; A.—I saw nothing to excite suspicion until after I went in; then I thought that was not the place that Lovejoy's Hotel had been represented to me to be.

Q.—Did the gentleman who sits here by plaintiffs' counsel just now, go with you down to Greenwich-street? A.—No, Sir; he went to some corner, but I do not know of what street; I do not know the streets of the City familiarly; when he went out with us, he went by direction of plaintiffs' counsel.

Q.—Do you know the defendants in this suit, or either of them? A.—No, Sir, no more than I have described; don't remember that any one in the house was introduced to me as Mr. Lovejoy or Mr. Fallon.

On his redirect examination he testified:

Q.—When you went out to look for the Lovejoy Hotel a few minutes ago, did the gentleman you have spoken of as having been sent with you by plaintiffs' counsel, in any way direct you? [Objected to as leading.] A.—No, he did not.

Q.—Are you sure that the house No. 160 Greenwich-street is the house spoken of by you as the Lovejoy House to which you were first conducted as you have stated? A.—I am sure of it.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN WELD.

John Weld, another of said witnesses, being duly sworn, in answer to the following interrogatories upon said examination, deposed as follows:

Q.—Where do you reside? A.—I have resided in California for the past four years. My future residence will be in Chelsea, Massachusetts.

Q.—Do you intend to remain long in this City? A.—I leave this afternoon, at three o'clock.

Q.—Do you know Libby & Whitney, the plaintiffs in this suit? A.—No, Sir; neither of them.

Q.—When did you come to this State from California? A.—I arrived on the 29th inst., in the steamer Illinois.

Q.—Did you land in company with Stephen Brown, the witness who has just testified? A.—Yes, Sir.

Q.—Where did you intend to go when you landed? A.—To Lovejoy's Hotel.

Q.—Where did you go? A.—To the Lovejoy House, No. 160 Greenwich street.

Q.—How came you to go there? A.—I was conducted there by a man who promised to take us to Lovejoy's Hotel.

Q.—Who went with you? A.—Stephen Brown and another man.

Q.—How came the man to promise to take you to Lovejoy's Hotel? A.—I asked him if he was attached to Lovejoy's Hotel; he said he was; I told him we wanted to go there; when he brought us to the Lovejoy House, I, who had stopped at the Lovejoy's Hotel before, discovered that the house he had brought us to was not Lovejoy's Hotel, and told him so; he told me Lovejoy's Hotel was closed; that this was a branch of it, and the place where visitors at Lovejoy's Hotel got their meals; I went in and left my baggage just inside of the door, in the front office, and then went off to see if Lovejoy's Hotel was closed, and found it was not closed, but open; when I set down my baggage the man who conducted me to the house took it, before I went out, and put it in the bar-room in the rear of the office, with other baggage; I did not object to it; I did not see that man do anything else about the house at that time; when I returned from Lovejoy's Hotel I started to leave the Lovejoy House, in company with Brown, when the man behind the bar called out to others to stop me; a man who had his hat and coat off, and who had previously told me that breakfast would shortly be ready for us, if we wished to take breakfast, stepped up when we were about to leave, and told me that I ought to be locked anyway, because it was all my fault that the others left the house; I then sat down and asked this same man who had his hat and coat off, if we could not take our dinner and pay for it and satisfy him in that way and then go, as we wanted to leave that afternoon in the cars; nothing more was said about dinner; he said I must pay $2 for a day's board before I could go; he afterwards told me to step up to the counter and pay $2 and take a receipt and go; the man behind the desk, when I stepped up, demanded the $2 of me; I borrowed the money of Brown and paid the $2 to the man behind the desk; the man with the hat and coat off kept beside me all the time; before I went in the house I noticed the sign of Lovejoy House on the building; I was not deceived by the sign, for I knew this was no Lovejoy's Hotel, as I had stopped there before; I went down a few minutes ago with Brown and the other gentlemen to look after the number and street of the house; the occurrences I have testified to at the Lovejoy House took place on the 29th instant; I do not know either of the defendants in this action.

The case was tried in the special term in June, before Chief Justice Daly, and the result was a decree as prayed for in favor of the plaintiffs, granting a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from designating their hotel or inn by the name of the "Lovejoy House," or of employing any sign, printing, advertisement or device in which Lovejoy or Lovejoy's is used to mislead the public, and injure the custom or good will of the hotel of the plaintiffs, which has hitherto been rightfully known by the name of Lovejoy's Hotel. The defendants were also to pay the costs of action, amounting to $149 83. The judgment in the above case was rendered on Friday, and it is understood, the same officially to shut up the house, the furniture in the place was attached and taken out.

Messrs. C. Vanderpoel for defendants. Messrs. Ely for plaintiffs.

MARKET REPORTS

Matthews, Gray's daily reports, for N. Y. Daily Times.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Aug. 3, 1857—6 P. M.

ASHES.—The demand, in transit, prices are without alteration. Pearls, $7 25@$7 37½; Pots, $7 25. 109 lbs.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—The Boston Shipping List states that: "The boot and shoe business has been very good the past week, and sales quite large, particularly of heavy goods. Although the trade is about one or two weeks late, yet the business is believed to be very little, if any, behind last year. Prices generally are well sustained the firm with the upward tendency. The number of buyers from the South and West is still large, with fresh arrivals daily, and we look for an active market for some weeks. There is still a very fair assortment of seasonable goods to select from, but our stock is fast becoming reduced. Manufacturers are coming out comparatively few goods, the continued advance in leather being quite a check on active operations on their part. Prices will, undoubtedly, advance on leading styles before the season closes. The exports by water the past week, principally to Southern ports, have been larger than we have seen for some time, as can be seen from the comparing 12,022 cases against 1,635 cases for the corresponding week in 1856, and 4,992 cases in 1855. Included in the exports also are 1,526 cases to San Francisco from this port. There is now very little demand for California, and the shipments to that market for some months past have been comparatively light."

TELLKAMPF & KITCHING'S MONTHLY WOOL CIRCULAR.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, Aug. 1.

During the month of July, the demand for our Native Fleece Wool has been a good and brisk one. The manufacturers who were short of stock, and had not received their supply from the interior, have been the principal buyers. The dealers disposed of their Wool about as fast as they could get it ready for the market. The stock has now, however, somewhat accumulated, while the demand is not as active; yet the holders are quite firm at an advance of from 2c.@3c. ℔ lb. above the opening rates. Pulled Wool has also met with a ready sale at advanced prices, and the market is at present nearly bare of old stock. In Low Foreign Wool, there has been a fair business doing, but chiefly for supplying the immediate wants of the manufacturers, and but little on speculation. Although buyers operate very reluctantly, and with much caution, yet the sellers feel quite confident that they will obtain their prices. The late important arrivals of Cape Wools at Boston were readily sold at satisfactory prices. Sales have likewise been made of fine unwashed Mestizo, here and in Boston, at rates within the range of our quotation. Prices for Wool now, and before the duty was taken off, or upon Wool admitted free, differ but very slightly in most descriptions. The accounts of all the extensive Wool Fairs on the European Continent make mention of a rise, more or less upon last year's prices. At the Wool fair in Berlin, (Prussia,) there have been sold in one day about 13,000,000 lbs.—in fact, all the Wool offered brought an advance of 5 to 10 ℔ cent. above the rate of last year at the same period.

REMARKS.—The market opened this week with a very heavy business, resulting in the sale of some 11,000 bags Rio on Monday and Tuesday, as noticed above, and there was a fair disposition on the part of buyers to take other desirable parcels at the same figures. Holders, however, have generally advanced their pretensions, and have either withdrawn their stocks or demand higher figures, the market consequently closes quietly.

The sales noted have been exclusively to jobbers and grocers. We quote prime and choice Rio 11¼c.@11¾c.; good, 11¼c.; fair, 11¼c.; Java, 16¾c.@17c.; Laguayra, 12¼c.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

[illegible] Police Commissioners met again yesterday, and filled vacancies in the Police Force, [illegible] voting 172 items, adjourned without [illegible] a choice of Commissioner in place of Mr. DELAFIELD. Messrs. BOWEN, NYE and STRANAHAN [illegible] for, on Saturday, for Queen Cum[illegible] Messrs. WILSON and POWELL changed their [illegible] Pilots to DAVID BARKER, and Mr. [illegible] got his from DANIEL ULLMAN [illegible] BROOKS. Each doggedly stuck [illegible] position, and unless a compromise be brought about there is no knowing when this [illegible] may be settled. The Board did [illegible] business of interest yesterday. They [illegible] to-day, but the voting for County [illegible] will be renewed until Wednesday. The [illegible] are looked upon with interest, and the [illegible] crowded daily.

[illegible] meeting of the citizens of the [illegible] Ward, in favor of forming a [illegible] was held at the First Ward Hotel last evening. A series of [illegible] the objects of the association [illegible] and a Committee appointed to carry [illegible]

The Democrats of the Sixth Ward had a mass [illegible] last night, at which Mayor WOOD was not present, but both Colonel MING and [illegible] were. There were some strong resolutions [illegible] and a few speeches. Mr. KELLY's speech was the best. The music was not very good, but equal to the occasion. The cheering was very vociferous, but juvenile. The tavern on the opposite corner did a large business.

The Mayor sent a communication to the Board of Supervisors yesterday, returning the resolution [illegible] the Commissioners of Taxes to have [illegible] and filled up. A communication was received from the Commissioners of Taxes, showing the relative value of the Real and Personal Estate in the City and County of New-York, as assessed in 1856 and in 1857. The results were as follows:

	1856.	1857.
Real Estate	$[illegible]	$[illegible]
Personal Estate	112,767,[illegible]	109,[illegible]
Total	$[illegible]	$541,[illegible]

In the Board of Councilmen, among other matters, a communication was received from Mr. D. D. COLYER, which was not read, but made matter of special order for next meeting. Councilman McCARTY refused to vote either way upon any proposed action on it, and after a tedious debate, Councilman O'CONNOR succeeded in placing him (McC.) where he belongs, by the tactics of party, and both defeated parties seized under arrest. The Board then adjourned.

The Board of Aldermen received two communications from the Mayor last evening—one having reference to a reward for the detection of murderers, and the other urging the necessity of contracts for cleaning streets. A communication was received from the Comptroller in relation to the Police property.

In Baltimore on Sunday night, shortly after 9 o'clock, a man named JOHN T. BERRY was shot dead while standing at the corner of Baltimore and North streets, by one of a party of young men who were seen lurking at the opposite corner. This is but one of several cases of violence that occurred in that city during 24 hours. Early on Sunday morning a man named COXSON was shot by LEWIS HAMILTON, with whom he had a quarrel. Difficulty at a drinking house. Both men were seriously wounded.

About one hundred importers met yesterday at 2 P. M. in the rotunda of the Exchange, to devise some means whereby increased facilities might be afforded them in getting their goods from the Custom-House. Messrs. WILSON G. HUNT, FRANCIS CONSTABLE, GIDEON POTT, CHARLES KEUTZER, and ALEXANDER T. STEWART were appointed a Committee to confer with the Collector of the Port upon the subject. As soon as the Committee are ready to report, a second meeting is to be called.

Yesterday application was made before Justice DARGAN for the appointment of a Receiver to take possession of all the John-street Church property in the hands of BENNOS and others, the defendants, and to empower the Receiver to pay out of the property a loan, from the annual Conference of the Church, amounting to $700. His Honor denied the motion.

The Astor Library lecture for the ensuing three months. The additions to the building will be completed early in July, and there will be no departure from the [illegible] style already adopted. It is expected that the usual rooms at the back of the Library will be ready on the expiration of the Lecture during which the Library is closed.

The Court of General Sessions opened yesterday for the August term. Nothing was done beyond impanneling a Petit Jury. There was not a quorum of the Grand Jury in attendance. Recorder SMITH occupies the Bench.

The inquest, in the case of the murder of young TOURNEUR, will be resumed this afternoon at 4 o'clock, before Coroner CRANE, at Hoboken. There have been no new arrests in the matter since Sunday night. Mrs. MITCHELL, who, it will be remembered, was taken by mistake to Hoboken after her arrest, was brought back again, and confined at the Sixth Precinct Station-house, with the other two, as Coroner CRANE did not like to detain her without the Governor's requisition. A requisition, however, will not be necessary, as the arrested parties have all consented to go without this formality. The barkeeper, RANDY, who was arrested on Sunday night, has been identified, by the young men who were with TOURNEUR, as the man who made the assault with the club.

GIDEON J. TUCKER was last evening elected a Sachem of the Tammany Society, in place of WILLIAM H. CORNELL, deceased.

JAMES KING, who was sent up to Sing Sing in 1854, from Poughkeepsie, on a charge of burglary, escaped from prison last Saturday unnoticed, and has not since been discovered.

A young married gentleman fell from the Shrewsbury boat yesterday, and after swimming three hundred yards, was suffered to drown. The boat was headed, but there were no appliances on board in the way of tackle or boats to save him.

The number of commuters over the Jersey City Ferry is now 5,000, not including Railroad passengers. August is our quarter day.

An injunction has been obtained by Messrs. Lester and Whitney upon an establishment calling itself "Lovejoy's Hotel," established at No. 149 Greenwich-street, upon proofs the evidence of which were had so large by way of the genuine article from travellers to city, were made indirectly through the servants, running facilities furnished them by the proprietors.

GEORGE RUFF, EDWARD KNIGHT, JOHN BURGOYNE and ISAAC VAN BUSKIRK, the stevedores arrested on Sunday night, charged with assaulting some of their comrades, were yesterday taken before Justice DEVLIN. Ruff and Knight ordered to [illegible] were held to bail in the sum of $500 each. They will be tried to-day in the Court. BURGOYNE and VAN BUSKIRK gave bail in $500 each, and were discharged, to appear and answer if the grand jury shall indict them. There are two complaints against BURGOYNE.

The Health Commissioners yesterday took a trip down the bay, inspected the Quarantine grounds, ate a hearty dinner, and expressed their approval of a new iron scow, constructed for the purpose of burning bedding, &c. from infected vessels. There are three vessels infected with yellow fever, lying at the lower anchorage.

The great prize fight between BRADLEY and RAWKINS, the Philadelphia pugilists, for $1,000 a-side, came off in Canada, not far from Buffalo, on Saturday. It lasted 2 hours and 38 minutes, and 151 rounds were fought. BRADLEY was declared winner, and passed through the City yesterday afternoon, on his way home. Large amounts of money changed hands among the "Fancy."

PATRICK and RICHARD ROURKE, both sailors, brothers, got into a fight, on Monday morning, in West-street, opposite No. 20, when the latter finding himself wounded, ran away, but was pursued by his brother, who plunged a large clasp-knife into his hip, causing a wound four inches in length and three in width. The alarm was given, and PATRICK was arrested by the First Ward Police, and taken before Justice OSBORNE, who locked him up to await the result of the injuries inflicted. The wounded man was conveyed to the New-York Hospital, and placed under the care of Dr. NOYES, who considers his recovery very doubtful. The cause of the quarrel did not transpire, but it is understood that the brothers had been for some time on bad terms.

The publishers of the Leader newspaper brought an action in the Marine Court yesterday, against the City Corporation, for the recovery of $476, alleged to be due for publishing the proceedings of six meetings of the Common Council. The Comptroller refused to audit and pay the bill, on the ground that the Common Council (which made the contract with the publishers of the Leader) is not an executive body, that it has no right to make contracts, and that this work was of such a character that it should be performed by contract duly made by the Finance Department. Counsel for plaintiffs argued that the Common Council, as a legislative body, had the power to order its proceedings published in such papers as it chose to designate; that the work was of a character that could not well be done by contract, and having been performed at the usual rate, judgment should be for the plaintiff. The Judge so held, and ordered judgment for the amount claimed, with costs and $12 allowance.

The Dr. Rockwell is the new iron scow constructed for the purpose of gathering and burning up infected bedding, clothing, &c. She is the joint product of the inventive powers of Dr. ROCKWELL and Councilman PHILLIPS, and was first suggested by the TIMES. She is 30 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 4 feet deep; is a square scow, with portable masts and sails; has two air tight tanks, one at each end, and bars of cast iron reaching from side to side, and cost $1,500.

The Joint Board of Brooklyn Aldermen and Supervisors held a meeting last evening to consider the appropriation to be made for carrying on the city government the ensuing year. The resolution as to police money was laid on the table for the present, to enable the Board to determine more definitely the exact amount required. A portion only of the business was transacted, when the Board adjourned for one week.

Mr. HENRY W. MEAD, City Weigher of Brooklyn, was found dead, on Wednesday morning, in his office, No. 97 Pine-street. It appears that as the porter opened the store of Messrs. LOWER & BUSKIRK, on the same floor with the office of deceased, at 8 o'clock in the morning, he observed a peculiar odor proceeding from Mr. MEAD's office, and, on going to it, found that gentleman lying dead upon the floor. Mr. M. was seen in his office towards evening on Saturday, apparently in good health, and it is supposed must have been taken in a fit while sitting in his chair and thus died. Coroner CORNEY held an inquest upon the body, and the Jury rendered a verdict of "Death by congestion of the brain and rupture of a cerebral artery." The deceased was a native of New-York, 42 years of age. He leaves a widow, two sons and an adopted daughter, residing in Classon avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. MEAD is in Bridgeport, but was telegraphed yesterday.

American Diplomats and Diplomacy.

In proportion to our years, the United States have contributed liberally to the world's stock of valuable diplomatic lore. WHEATON is to-day, unquestionably, the most generally received authority upon international law, throughout the civilized world; and the dispatches of a long list of our statesmen, ending with the names of WEBSTER, EVERETT and MARCY, are admitted to be among the ablest diplomatic papers extant. Nor need we rest our laurels on these alone. Dispatches from some of our Ministers abroad are quoted by the authorities as clear, unanswerable expositions of true doctrine on contested points; and others, published at the call of Congress, exhibit a keen research and masterly ability upon the part of their authors, of which we may well be proud.

But while these bright examples give cheering evidence of the name we might achieve in the world of diplomacy, it must be admitted, also that no nation ever furnished in its diplomatic personel so much to excite the ridicule of other powers, and to disgrace us in their eyes. We might cite many instances in proof, were it necessary,—but they will readily occur to the reader. Our frequent short-comings in this respect result from the senseless system of selecting men to fill foreign appointments less because of their fitness for the places they are to occupy, than with reference to the necessity of rewarding them for party service. Other nations educate their diplomats for that branch of the public service; but we, if a man fails as a United States Senator, and is repudiated by his State, pack him off to the Court of Madrid, for instance, regardless whether he possesses the first qualification of manner, mind or education.

Nowhere have we suffered greater inconvenience in consequence of these ill-considered appointments than in our relations with Spain, and with the Spanish American Republics of Central and South America. Experience teaches that precisely in these countries are to be found the keenest, shrewdest and most wily diplomats with whom we have to deal; yet, almost without exception during the last ten years, we have pitted against them men devoid of the first qualification. General Augustus CESAR DOBBS represents us at Madrid at this time,—where the very best thing he has accomplished is—nothing; and when we wanted a man to settle affairs with New-Granada at an important crisis, a good-natured, rollicking, blustering lawyer from Louisiana was selected, whose chief qualification would seem to be ability to clothe a good round oath in unequivocal Spanish or French. Before he left the United States we predicted his entire failure, satisfied that a man in his [illegible] his appointment, in entire ignorance, would return from his mission without a shadow of results. It is legal of him that when he reached BOGOTA he called upon LINO DE POMBO, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, unofficially, suggested that there was no end of their trying to humbug each other, told him that he (Mr. MORAN) had come down to arrange the pending issues between New-Granada and the United States, that these were his instructions, (submitting them,) which he would like to have him look over, &c.

All this is said to have occurred in the presence of a third party—a musician-master in Señor POMBO's family—through whom the whole story speedily found its way into the usual channels of public gossip. POMBO took MORAN's papers and kept them for two weeks, during which time our Commissioner was utterly baffled in his efforts to get an interview. Meantime, having thus learned exactly what our Government had instructed its agent to ask, the New-Granadian Minister was able to set about the manufacture of public sentiment against them, so that when at last he gave Mr. MORAN opportunity formally to present his demands, it was the easiest thing in the world to reject them, on the ground that "public sentiment" would not admit of their entertainment for a moment! Señor de POMBO had undoubtedly been fully pre-advised of our Commissioner's calibre,—for at Panama, while on his way to Bogota, he never failed of an opportunity to speak his contempt for the people to whom he was accredited, and express the wish that he had them all on a good plantation, at the same time that he boasted confidently of his magnificent intentions in disposing of their property, and invited acquaintances of an hour to go with him to look at various islands in the bay of Panama which he "thought" he would "take."

President BUCHANAN has, thus far, made very few foreign appointments. While he exercises his own good judgment, prompted by long experience, and guided by his personal knowledge of men and their capability, he will not be likely to fall into serious errors. The only diplomatic contretemps into which he has yet been betrayed, that occurs to us, was the selection of Ex-Governor BIGLER of California to represent the United States at the polished and elegant capital of Chili; and in that case, we understand that Mr. BUCHANAN's judgment was overborne by the importunities of political friends, who insisted on this sop for the broken-down and dissolute politician. This he will disgrace the country he represents, no one doubts who knows his antecedents, and it may wilfully impervious to their machings. We refer, with no pleasure, to these humiliating examples of the injury which may result from improper diplomatic appointments. We hold them up simply as warnings for the future—to impress upon the Administration the necessity of greater caution. Surely, in matters so vitally affecting the American name abroad, and so intimately connected with our interests, political and material, partisan scrapes should be forgotten, and the mental, moral and educational qualifications of applicants be alone considered. The inquiry has too often been, "Will Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith do well enough to make it safe to gratify the Hon. Mr. Snooks, who desires his appointment?" The effort seems to be to ascertain how low a grade of qualification may be tolerated without irrecoverable disgrace, rather than to secure the very best ability. Diplomatic positions are parcelled out too often for the men who are to be pensioned, when the incumbents should be selected for the places, and solely because of eminent fitness. May we not hope that in completing the list of American representatives abroad, the Administration will honor itself and the country by reversing these disgraceful precedents, and giving us such a diplomatic corps as will truly reflect American education, refinement, and ability, wherever they may be located?

A New White House.

The Washington correspondent of The Press, Colonel FORNEY's new paper, says that "there can be little doubt that the erection of a new Presidential mansion will be one of the measures that will receive the favorable action of the next Congress." The propriety of the measure will not be questioned, we imagine, by any one, except those who may have a desire to make way with our Presidents soon after their election. The present Presidential mansion is conceded to be an unhealthy residence in Summer, and Mr. BUCHANAN has determined not to live in it during the hot months. It can be put to a very good use as the official residence of the President, where he can hold his Cabinet meetings, receive all official visitors, and reside in it during the Winter months, when Congress is in session, if he should find it necessary to be near the Capitol. Of course, the new Presidential mansion would be more out of town, on higher ground, away from the river, and in a healthier location, and, of course, a more elegant and convenient house than the present one, though not necessarily larger. But, while the subject of a new Presidential mansion is under consideration, we hope that the proposition which has heretofore been made to build houses for the Secretaries and Postmaster-General will not be forgotten. It is not so much for the sake of the gentlemen who fill those stations as for the convenience of the people who may have occasion to visit them, that it is desirable they should have a fixed residence, and one suitable to the position they occupy. A proposition has been made by a citizen of the District of Columbia to build four houses for the principal heads of Departments, to be leased to the Government. But the nation is rich enough to build suitable houses for the members of the Cabinet, and it would be true economy to do so. As there is a handsome and commodious house furnished for the residence of the Captains of all the naval stations in the country, whose term of service never exceeds three years, there can be no good reason given why as much should not be done for the heads of Departments at Washington.

THE POLICE COMMISSIONERS.—There was a slight change of performances at the Office of the Police Commissioners yesterday, the two Mayors having dropped Mr. PHELPS and taken up Mr. DAVID BARKER, and Mr. CRODWELL having substituted Mr. ERASTUS BROOKS for Mr. ULLMAN. The three Republican Commissioners stuck to Mr. CURTIS. Mr. CRODWELL has a preference for defeated candidates of the American Order, and, we presume, will pay them all the compliment of a day's ballot. [illegible] the new defeated candidates for Governor, he will probably next take up the list of defeated candidates for the Mayoralty. As the weather continues hot, and the community are easily amused, the little farce performed by the Police Commissioners has a gentle effect upon the minds of the people, well adapted to the season. Anything more exciting and violent would prove too much for our wilted citizens during the dog days.

Injustice to Minnesota Settlers.

A correspondent writes us, that through the instrumentality of Hon. H. M. RICE, late Delegate to Congress from Minnesota, all the public lands in that Territory have been withdrawn from settlement by preemption for four months, in order to enable private corporations to locate the best lands for railroad purposes. If we are not mistaken this is a departure from the general custom in such cases. We believe it is usual to withdraw the lands from private entry while railroad lands are selecting; but certainly it is neither justice nor sound policy to close them against preemption by actual settlers. If our correspondent's statement is correct, the emigrants who have this Summer gone into Minnesota, under the invitation held out by our Preemption laws, in the expectation of taking up homesteads at the minimum price, will be compelled either to abandon the country or exhaust their slender means in purchasing of the speculators. The injustice and hardship of such a proceeding could not have occurred to the Secretary of the Interior, or he would have taken some measures to protect the actual settler. Is it yet too late? In any event the selfish conduct of Mr. RICE in thus sacrificing the poor settlers for the benefit of his own speculations, should be remembered in future years, when the money power of these railroad corporations shall seek to force him into places of political honor and emolument.

A NICE DISTINCTION.—The Richmond Enquirer claims for Virginia the character and position of a conservative peace-maker, standing politically and geographically midway between the extremists of the North and the South, and serving as a barrier to prevent a hostile meeting of the two belligerent forces. We are glad to see the leading organ of Virginian opinion laying claim to this distinction, as heretofore the same paper has decidedly ranged itself in the ranks of the extreme South. But the Enquirer still shows a leaning towards the extremists of the South, which does not promise well for the independence and impartiality of its position. It says:

"The State of Virginia, standing between the two extremes, the unprincipled traitors of the North, on the one hand, and the furious fire-eating malcontents of the Slaveholding States on the other, operates in her influence as a calm conservator and mediator between two violent and dangerous currents of public sentiment."

The discontented party of the North are "unprincipled traitors" in the view of the Enquirer, but the furious fire-eating disunionists of the Slave States are only "malcontents." But it is something gained for the Virginia organ to confess even that the malcontents of the Slave States may possibly be in the wrong.

THE GREAT MCFLIMSEY CONTROVERSY.—The question of Miss Flora McFlimsey's paternity is still enveloped in mystery. There are two parties who take opposite sides in the great controversy, one being vehement for the claims of Mr. BUTLER, while the other gallantly defend the claims of Miss PECK. We publish a highly interesting letter this morning from a correspondent on this important subject, which throws some light upon the controversy. Miss PECK, it seems, is a beautiful and precocious young lady, belonging to one of the most respectable families in the country, and her father is an accomplished clergyman of the Episcopal Church, whose reputation is beyond a suspicion. Our correspondent furnishes a poem written by the young lady, which certainly evinces a high degree of poetical talent, although it is in a very different style from "Nothing to Wear." It must be borne in mind that that part of Mr. BUTLER's poem, which the young lady claims to be the author contains nothing which a young lady educated in the seclusion of a country home might not have written; and some of the lines in her version which do not appear in Mr. BUTLER's, are certainly quite equal to any part of the whole poem. It is, to say the least of it, a very remarkable case, which well deserves to be included among the curiosities of literature.

Getting Goods from the Custom-House—Committee of Importers Appointed to Confer with the Collector.

About one hundred importers met, yesterday, at 2 P. M., at the Exchange, pursuant to a call, to devise some means to obviate the present delay and annoyance to which they say they are obliged to submit in obtaining their goods from the Custom-House.

Mr. CHARLES KEUTZER called the meeting to order, and moved the appointment of JOHN H. BROWN, Esq., as chairman.

Mr. BROWN, upon taking the chair, said that he had not expected the honor. He had come to be a looker on and vote upon the measures for reform that might be proposed. One thing was very clear to his mind, that a reform was needed. It was fair to say that the Collector of the Port was not to blame in the matter. He had been in office but thirty days—a large amount of goods were stored in the Custom-House warehouses when he came into office, and an unusually large amount of goods had arrived since. The warehouses were crowded, and it was nearly impossible to clear out the goods. It was unfortunate for importers that Mr. SCHELL did not come sooner into office. It was not necessary to apologize for the Collector, for no apology was needed. The Secretary of the Treasury was also new in office, but he believed that both the Secretary and the Collector were disposed to do all they could to enable merchants to obtain their goods with facility from the Custom House. The fact, however, was, that some old things would be done away, and new things introduced.

Mr. J. J. HENRY suggested that the remedy in the case must be sought through the Collector of the Port. He offered the following resolution as the most expeditious and sure way to effect the end aimed at:

Resolved, That a Committee of five importing merchants be appointed to confer with the Collector of the Port on the subject of delays in passing goods through the several departments of the Custom-House, in order that arrangements mutually satisfactory be perfected between the Government officers and the merchants, whereby increased facilities may be given in passing goods through the various forms of the Customs.

The resolution was passed with but one dissenting vote.

The following was the Committee named as called for by the resolution: Messrs. Wilson G. Hunt, Francis Cottenet, Gideon Pott, Charles Keutzer, and Alexander T. Stewart.

The Chairman, on motion, was added to the Committee.

Mr. SCHELL, of the firm of SCHELL & HAIN, moved that the Committee, as soon as they were prepared to report, call a second public meeting, which was carried.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the Committee.

[illegible] Escape from the Tombs.

On Saturday last, about three o'clock, the officer of the State Prison at Sing Sing received a dispatch, namely, JAMES KING, who was or should have been at work in the copper shop, at the north end of the prison, [illegible] was made for him, and, somewhat earlier than usual, the remainder of the men were called from work and locked up.

As yet all efforts to catch King have proved fruitless, although men were immediately sent to all the principal roads leading to New-York, and also to the bridges crossing the Croton.

After KING was missed, it was ascertained that an extraordinary object had been noticed floating in the river in front of the prison. It is now supposed that KING had secreted near the water two five-gallon jugs—such articles being made in the shop where he was at work. These he had probably fastened together by a piece of rope, thus forming a kind of cradle by which his head might be held above water.

It is supposed that having completed his arrangements, he launched his barge, and then had a tremendous task of swinging himself over him by one of his fellow-convicts. Such combinations are frequently made between convicts—one having willingness to assist the other every assistance possible to facilitate his escape. During the week there was a large oak pickle wharf, from which stones were being unloaded.

Since the escape of KING, it has been ascertained that a pair of pantaloons and a white shirt had been stolen from this barge. Probably they were worn by KING, and that he is now abroad, in a respectable citizen's dress, or what will answer in this weather for a full wardrobe.

KING was tried at Poughkeepsie, Dutchess Co., in November, 1854, on a charge of burglary. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be confined in the State Prison for 3 years and 6 months. His time should have been out on the 20th of May next. He is now about 23 years of age, 5 feet 11½ inches high. He has light hair, and his face is quite freckled. He is a native of New-York. He has behaved well while in the prison. A reward of $50 has been offered for his recovery.

RAPID WORK IN FORTIFICATION LANDS.—In the Appropriation Bill of the last session of Congress, $150,000 was set apart with which to commence building a fortification on or near a promontory called Wilken's Point, on Long Island, opposite Throg's Neck. Wilkins' Point was adjudged to be the most suitable location for the purpose of any in that neighborhood, and accordingly negotiations were opened with the owner, Mr. WEISSMANN, for its purchase, by Major BARNARD, of the Board of United States Engineers. This was in the first part of the month of April last, and the price asked by Mr. WEISSMANN was $120,000. The Government had the refusal of the property for that sum until the 1st of May. General TOTTEN, the Chief Engineer, thought this too much money, and the Secretary of War evidently thought it too low, for the offer was not accepted.

Meantime certain speculators, getting wind of what was going on, saw that it would be a grand opportunity to make a pretty penny out of the Federal Treasury, and accordingly tendered the owner of Wilkins' Point $190,000 for his land, which was accepted, on condition that the Government would over the Bullock time without buying.

Mr. GEORGE BEVINS, one of the buyers, and his associates, after coming into possession immediately elevated the price to $200,000!! and went to Washington with certificates, affidavits, vouchers and what not, and that old fogy Uncle Sam was persuaded to pay the very round sum of $200,000 for property which he refused to buy at $150,000 less than three months before.

The property bought measures about 124 acres, but does not include the whole Point. There yet remains some 90 acres, covering a large portion of the water front of one side of the Point, which the Government in the end will be compelled to purchase also.

Quarantine—A Row.

There have been no arrivals of vessels from infected ports. The Hesperus has been permitted to come up and discharge.

There was quite a row on Saturday night among the stevedores, who being delivered from visiting their homes while employed upon vessels in Quarantine, took up their lodgings in the empty hospital buildings, as the nearest and most desirable form of relief from their confinement on shipboard, to spend the Sabbath. Some of them having obtained some bad liquor from a groggery opposite the Quaran[illegible] gate, got a large brick in their hat, and raised a very respectable City muss, to the no small scandal of the peace-loving citizens of Stapleton, to the great annoyance of the Health Officer. A portion of the gang, who had concocted some grievance against the others, entered their sleeping apartments after they had retired, and assailed them with [illegible] clubs and cabbage heads, stolen from a neighboring garden. A general melee followed, in which PETER HALE and CHARLES ROBERTS were quite badly injured. GEORGE RUFF, JOHN BURGOYNE, EDWARD KNIGHT and ISAAC VAN BUSKIRK made a complaint against the ringleaders, who will be arraigned before Justice DEVLIN, as soon as they are discharged from their Quarantine bonds.

A HOP AT BATH.—A pleasant affair came off at the Bath Hotel, Sea Side, L. I., on Saturday night. The guests of the house, who are visiting Bath equally for health and enjoyment, thinking doubtless that they would advance more rapidly on the road to the latter by a series of "hops," determined during the week to initiate their Terpsichorean entertainments at its close. SHELTON's band was sent for; the ladies prepared to look beautiful; and friends from New-York were invited to be present. The dining hall was the dancing room, and it was filled with fair women and bravely dressed men. Among the former we observed Mrs. McC——b, Mrs. H——n, and Miss F——, of this City, and Miss J——s, of Brooklyn. A cool breeze from the ocean invigorated the dancers as soon as they became fatigued, and enabled them to perform their arduous duties with becoming agility. At the stroke of midnight, announcing Sunday—the Cinderella's fled from the ball-room, doffed their dancing costumes, and the lights were put out.

FORTUNATE ESCAPE.—Yesterday afternoon at about 5 o'clock, as a woman named ELLEN CASEY was taking some clothes off a line from the top of house No. 106 Charles-street, she overstretched herself, and was precipitated into the adjacent vacant block from a height of 31 feet. Doctor VAN ANTWERP was in attendance, and states that she has only suffered a severe sprain of the muscles and tendons of one foot. Her escape is perhaps due to her falling on a car that was heeled, which yielded and broke the fall.

DEMOCRATIC GENERAL COMMITTEE—A MASS MEETING.—There was a meeting of the Cooper Democratic General Committee, Saturday evening, at Tammany Hall. The attendance was small, and no special business was transacted. An adjournment was had till next Tuesday evening, when arrangements will be perfected for a mass meeting to protest against the acts of the late Legislature.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.—No new removals were made at the Custom-House yesterday. The axe is suspended yet over the necks of a host of Inspectors. The casual reader might have concluded, from the way it read in our paper of yesterday, that the list of the fifty night-watchmen were new appointees. This is wrong. They were the men who lost their places by the late instructions from the Department, abolishing the office and devolving the duties upon other parties.

MEETING OF THE TAMMANY SOCIETY—ELECTION OF A SACHEM.—A regular monthly meeting of the Tammany Society was held last evening, at Tammany Hall. After the usual formal business, GIDEON J. TUCKER was unanimously elected Sachem, in place of WILLIAM H. CORNELL, deceased. No other business was done.

[illegible] Miss Sarah Peck and William Allen Butler, I have been an humble instrument, and stand [illegible] be addicted to that name in the pronunciation of proper nouns.

Rev. ISAAC PECK resides in the town of Greenwich, in the State of Connecticut, about eight miles from the village of Patchogue. He was for seven years the assistant of Rev. Dr. BURGESS, of Christ Church, and for eleven years teacher of a classical school in this City. He now has charge of the Parish of Rye-Beach. The Rev. gentleman is the daughter of the late Chief Justice [illegible] Lansing, the eldest child of [illegible] in the school-room, and is now nearly fifteen years of age. She is of middling stature, [illegible] fair, native pale, with dark auburn hair. High forehead and dark eyes—full and dreamy when at rest.

Until the past two years her education has wholly devolved upon her parents. She is now attending a school conducted by a gentleman who has formerly officiated in the pulpit. Every attention has been given to the education of Miss PECK, and she is proficient in Latin and Greek, and familiar with Algebra. She has enjoyed full liberty to indulge in such reading as her mind prompted, having free access to the large library of her father.

The first knowledge of the poem [illegible] is Writer came to Miss PECK, about the last of July or the first of June, in [illegible] one day repeated some of the first few lines. These attracted the attention of Miss PECK, and she asked her companion where she had seen them, and was answered that they were in the New-York Observer. Of course her curiosity was excited, as the "Rosalind" in the "Flora McFlimsey," a name of her own creation. She asked her companion to bring her the paper in which they were printed, which was done, and then she found her lines had swelled almost to the magnitude of six rods.

She returned the paper, and shortly after, at home, repeated to her mother the lines which she had written. At a subsequent period, while riding in the carriage with her father, she repeated the lines to him. She was much in the habit, when riding with her father, of repeating scraps of poetry, apparently unconscious whether they were being listened to by those around her. After repeating the lines, she turned to her father and asked him what he thought of them. He replied that he had not paid much attention to her recitation, and told her to repeat them. This she did, and then he made some remarks implying that praise of this composition was a thought, and asked her where she got them. Then she says in reply, "Pope, I write them." Of course some questioning followed, in which she admitted the circumstances under which she had written—her loss of the manuscript fragments—and the publication of them similar to how with many more, which she had seen in the Observer.

Until that moment, Mr. PECK himself was unconscious of the existence or publication of the poem. He reprimanded his daughter for her carelessness in losing the poetry, urging her to turn her attention to compositions to him. This was [illegible] there the subject dropped. The curiosity of the Father had been awakened, but he gave it little further attention, until at a subsequent period, when a dental friend was a guest at the house. The old lady always been a favorite with the gentleman, by frequently making her presents of books. He had one of a little poem which he had written for her, and which was just then being much talked of in the City. He went on to repeat the first lines of "Nothing to Wear." Here was a [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] course she was again interrupted by Miss PECK. Her father said to his visitor, "Why, Butler, there is something very much like these." The friend was [illegible] to hear her lines, and at his request she repeated them to Mr. [illegible]

[illegible] wrote them as quickly, or quicker than [illegible] have copied them from a book; and [illegible] those alone, which it was thought had been [illegible] bodied in the published poem, but also [illegible] book, which she had [illegible] or another.

[illegible]

Through the dampness and dirt make your daily way;
Hear the cheery cry of childhood, the praise that rewards
From the poor dying creature who writhes on the floor
The coffee that profers—like hell's coffee—abound,
And the prayers which the starving pour empty at round,
For the land where the famished shall hunger no more.

Upon his return to our city, the elated friend narrated this episode—and, I believe, did not hesitate to express his conviction of the entire truthfulness of Miss PECK—and that she had written the lines he had lost them, and that they had been found by some person, who altered, enlarged, and published them.

In the circle in which the elated friend was present, of course the story was received with great interest, and discussed freely. Intent on [illegible] it should have found its way from that circle to the newspapers. But before anything had ever appeared in print, the father of Miss PECK called upon Mr. BUTLER, and narrated the circumstances, requesting that Mr. BUTLER would communicate them to whomever had furnished the poem for his paper. This Mr. BUTLER declined doing. It was with him a matter of business—he had paid for the manuscript, and had published it, and he was indifferent as to who might or who might not be the father, either of the six lines, or the nine lines, of the twenty-five lines, or of the enlarged and extended poem. When the poem assumed a back form, the fall or called upon the publisher, repeated his statement to them, requesting that they would impart it to the author of the letter. He received no response.

The subject was first publicly alluded to in the columns of the Courier and Enquirer, but without any mention of the names of the parties. This publication was noticed in the Evening Post, the editor of which paper coupled with it the name of Rev. Isaac Peck, as the father of the young lady alluded to. The same publication of the Post contained the letter of Mr. WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER, claiming the only authorship of the poem. Upon the retraction of [illegible] and the advice of judicious friends, Mr. PECK prepared and published his letter [illegible] nearly as I have given them.

There the matter, so far as the two persons most interested are concerned, was permitted to drop. The editors of the different newspapers have, however, made innumerable comments, some adopting the truthfulness of Mr. BUTLER, and some giving equally implicit reliance upon the statements made by the father upon the vital assurances of the daughter.

I do not, myself, propose to attempt a reconciliation of the direct contradictions which have found in the publications. I have intended only to lay up the statements made by Mr. PECK, in order that those who feel interested might have before them all the facts, to aid them in reaching a conclusion. I think there are internal evidences in the lines [illegible] Miss PECK, which go very far to justify a belief that she is entirely truthful in all her statements, and entitled to be awarded all that is claimed for her.

One thing more. Of her ability to write poetry of a far higher order than the most of that which fills the magazines and newspapers of the day, there can be no doubt. She has written enough, which she has not lost, to establish that claim. Most of her compositions are mere fragments—fragments that would bear and justify the addition of prologues or conclusions similar to those produced as the original of Nothing to Wear. At my solicitation, I was permitted to make a copy of the following—the longest piece which she has written—yet incomplete. Not having an uninterrupted transcription:

THE SHIP WRECKED.

Fair shone the sun on the Atlantic wave,
And ocean's breast smiled to the gentle gale,
And Tritons, skimming from his coral cave,
Sported the [illegible] in his sail.
The weight of many an [illegible]
In [illegible] of morning [illegible]
Fair on her sun-green roof the opens [illegible]
[illegible]

The billows, [illegible] the lark's light,
And [illegible] sunlight, sparkling at the sight,
Now proudly rolling on the watery way,
The [illegible] gathered strength as a queen,
Still [illegible] behind her lay;
[illegible] they the wished-for shore had seen,
And [illegible], with vast and joyful cove—
Unfold the billows that besieged her side,
And cheered upon the road so well she knew;
Unfretting with her mighty breast the tide,
And its dancing thread'ry lings she dashed.

A motley throng upon the deck were assembled,
There were old men who numbered many a score;
The veteran tar in many a conflict battered,
Who, with long years of incidents of yore
Had oft and oft his fellow tar amazed;
There also youthful sailors, fair and strong,
Were chasing merry at their task, as used,
And thoughtless in their gay and happy song,
Rejoiced in and go near, of way so long.

There friends and kinsmen, sisters, sons and daughters
Stood jesting gay, and each a glad smile wore,
Who ne'er were wonted upon and ocean's waters,
Nor felt the tossing of his waves before;
And all, rejoicing at the thought of home,
That thereof soil which soon they hoped to reach,
Were sweetly thinking on an hour to come,
And felt a joy no tongue can ever teach,
And heave unsullied high beyond the power of speech.

But lo! upon yonder, in the dusky West—
A twinkling green frown gathering on the sky,
Which [illegible] attack, with its hasty crest,
The ship as joyous did no yes say;
For [illegible] rising, now the omen sight,
The dark's [illegible] passage soon might mark,
Yet none—unaptured with their visions bright,
And joy one as the storm of mania lark—
Reckoned on thought upon their warning dark.

It rises slow, and spreads with wide volume,
As one dark spot the sky's fair front upon,
And deep and stern is heard the muttered boom
Of thunder, ill-disguised, while ever and anon,
Athwart the gloomy surface darts a gleam
Of streaky lightning, glimmering with a ray,
So swift and transient, that it scarce might see it
To be aught more beside the sinful play
Of quivering sunbeam, gleaming on the spray.

Darker the sun now casts his trembling gleam,
Enchanted with a fleecy, shore cloud,
So closely [illegible] passed that naught more was seen
Save the sound orb that pierced its folding shroud;
The rising tempest, heavy shadows cast,
Upon the wild and troubled waves of ocean,
And like a nut-shell on the waters vast,
The [illegible] swayed by the conflicting motion.
Was tossed, bewildered, on the fierce commotion.

Interwoven to winds the gentle breezes blew—
And rolling swiftly o'er the rippling sea,
The heavy billows and strong furrows threw
Against the rudder, stern and side, while she,
Distracted by the current's raging force,
Danced on the billows, now to fury lashed,
In vain endeavor to pursue her course,
While wilder yet the flaming lightning lashed,
And lot or will the pealing thunder crashed.

"Down with the sail," aloud the Captain cries—
"Why stand ye here thus idle and inert?"
Aroused, at once, the eager seamen flies,
With powers awakened, active and alert,
To tear the canvas from the towering mast.
No word was spoken—silently they vie,
And centre a sign from man to man was past;
Yet upward, oft, was cast an anxious eye,
Upon the dark, black mass, now spreading wide and high.

The sun was veiled and gone; the thunder jarred
The strong foundations of the mighty deep;
The winds discourse with the waters warred,
The right's waves are mountains tall and steep;
[illegible] lightning streams with dirful glare,
While fiercer yet the mighty conflict rages
Through all the wide extended realm of air,
And ever with any a fresher content is seen,
And in the while all [illegible] force engaged.

[illegible] the deck the crowd, fast gathering grows,
And [illegible] with fears, then sounds the signal gun;
While from the cabin one faint murmur rose)
"God save my husband!, God preserve my son!"
Now trembled all with ill-dissembled dread,
Loud shouts the Captain, "Cut away the mast!"
While at their task the fearless seamen fled,
O'er every brow a gathering gloom fell fast,
And every eye around was fearful cast.

Far distant gleams the beacon's murky light,
Too friendly warning of a dangerous strand,
Yet now is shines disastrous on the sight,
Although a token of the promised land.
Now falls the second mast, and now the third,
These mighty trees—the ship's delight and pride;
Now wave on wave, in quick succession stirred,
Toss'd her, disabled, now from side to side,
Nor could the, left of all, the raging coast bide.

Then all around was darkness and despair;
Their weak hearts fainted and the braver quailed;
And now no sound, where but an hour before,
Mirth, joy, and transient happiness prevailed.
Now down she sinks, while, yawning to submerge,
The sea receives her, with her numerous host;
Now high uplifted on some mountain surge,
The lightning strip, from off her lofty post,

These lines have never been revised—have not even been rewritten by the young lady, since she first composed them. They are not polished, and there frequently occur words for which others might well be substituted. Miss Peck has never received any poetical training; she knows nothing more of the rules which govern poetical composition than she has imbibed from reading poetry, and in judging of these verses the critic will necessarily be called to make some allowance for the inexperience and crudeness of a girl, but just in her teens. But, without these allowances "The Shipwreck," for beauty of imagery, vigor of expression, and freedom of versification, can Let but attract attention, and demand admiration.

I have the subject—but I have the discussion is not to end. I hope that there will be somebody to analyze both the statements which have been made, the lines given, which it is assumed were the foundation-stones of the room as well as the structure which they have been made to sustain. JUS FICE.

FAIR AND FIREMEN'S CONTEST AT ELMIRA.—The last of August is set down for the Annual Fair of the Young Men's State Agricultural and Mechanical Society at Elmira, Chemung County, in this State. In addition to the other attractions which are common on such occasions, the uncommon one of a grand water-thing will come off by the various ambitious engine companies from different parts of the country, who will take the opportunity to exhibit their prowess in the peculiar line of their profession. The Fair opens on Monday, after which the Firemen's Ball will take place. Tuesday will be devoted to favorite amusements, after the fitting of each individual; Wednesday will be devoted to a parade and torch-light procession in the evening; Thursday will be employed in preparations for the playing match, which will take place on Friday—the terms of which are as follows:

First Class Engines—9 inch and over cylinders, play through 100 feet of hose and a 1¼-inch nozzle, both height and distance.

Second Class Engines—8 inch and under 9 inch cylinders, play through 100 feet of hose, on height and distance, through an inch nozzle.

Third Class Engines—Under 8 inch cylinders, play through 100 feet of hose and a ¾-inch nozzle, on height and distance.

In the above trial, the aggregate on height and distance will be counted in awarding the prizes, which are as follows:

Second Class Engines—First prize, $600; second prize, $400.

Third Class Engines—First prize, $600; second prize, $400; third prize, $200; fourth prize, $100.

Each company will pay $25 as an entrance fee, for which seven tickets for admission to the fair will be given to all the members.

Chief Marshal Howard will preside over the New-York Department, and will occupy a large marquee in the centre of the New-York encampment. The firemen will all camp out during the Fair. This City will be represented at Elmira by Mutual Engine Company No. 51, located on Twenty-second-street, near Second-avenue, and doing duty in the First, Fourth and Fifth Wire Districts. The Company numbers over fifty members, and will take their "Shanghae" engine, built last year by Messrs. Hunnes & Co., of Essex-street.

Philadelphia will send six companies, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Boston, and other cities out of this State, besides nearly every city in the western part of New-York, will be represented, and the contest cannot fail to be the most substantial one.

SUPPOSED MURDER AND ARSON.

Arrest of James Shepherd on Suspicion of Murdering his Wife and Burning the House—Testimony Before Justice Davison.

On the morning of the 9th of June last, between 1 and 2 o'clock, a fire broke out in a small frame dwelling situated in Fifty-third street near the Tenth-avenue, owned, and occupied on the upper floors at that time, by one James Shepherd and wife; the lower floor was occupied by an old German named Christian Geyer. The premises were very soon consumed. The flames also spread to several other tenements adjoining, and they were burned to the ground.

In the ruins of Shepherd's house the charred remains of Mrs. Shepherd were found by Fire-Marshal Baker. With the aid of the Police they were conveyed to the Twenty-second Ward Station.

From the conduct of Shepherd, both before and after the fatal occurrence, it was believed that the fire had been wilfully applied, not only for the destruction of the house, to obtain an amount of insurance from the Insurance Company, of more than double its value, but to cover up all traces of the murdered wife.

The statement of Shepherd is that he retired to bed on that night between 8 and 9 o'clock; at 12 o'clock he heard the voices of two Germans down stairs, one of which he recognized as that of Geyer, who lived on the first floor; he then fell asleep again; some time afterwards his wife woke him up, exclaiming; "My God, Jim, the house is on fire!" He jumped up, put on his pantaloons, went to the front window and tried to get his wife out, but the blaze and smoke coming up from below prevented him. He next opened the door leading to the hall, when the fire and smoke came in so strong that it prevented his closing it again; he then sought the window in the back room where there was no blaze or fire; he endeavored to get his wife out at this window, but she said no, she would get killed. He then got partly out at this window, and tried to pull his wife after him but she broke away from his grasp (as she was a very strong woman) and he fell into the yard, a distance of only about nine feet. After this he did not see or hear his wife again alive. When in the yard, he says he tried to enter the house by the back door, but the fire and smoke prevented him.

It further appears from the evidence that the house was but eighteen feet square and two stories in height; the first floor having but two rooms and the upper story three, built in a rough manner with old boards, and had been standing four years. The best part of this house had been taken away and moved to Harlem, where Shepherd was building another house, into which he intended moving.

On the Fifty-third-street house Shepherd had procured an insurance of $250, and $50 on his household effects. He was owing nine months' ground rent, which he had promised to pay on the day previous to the night of the fire.

Fire Marshal Baker deeming the matter one of strong suspicion, conferred with Mr. District Attorney Hall, and obtained from that efficient officer certain facts and instructions. In order to make a complete investigation, it was found necessary to exhume the body of Mrs. Shepherd, and accordingly Dr. John M. Carnochan accompanied by Mr. Baker, went to Greenwood Cemetery, and a post mortem examination was there made which resulted in eliciting some important facts tending to establish the theory that Mrs. Shepherd was not physically in a condition to escape with her husband.

Peter Bogart testified that he was the first one at the fire; the only person he saw was Shepherd, who was coming from his front door, exclaiming, "The Dutch have burnt my wife!" As witness was approaching the house he noticed the fire burning through about the centre of the roof. Shepherd did not say his wife was in the house; witness went to the front door and up the stairs to near the top; the fire was then burning in the roof; the rooms were filled with smoke, but he did not see any fire down stairs; he went down again, and around to the rear of the house; took a piece of board, got on the missing wood shed and pushed up the window, and looked into the room but could not see any one; he then went to the front of the house, broke open one of the windows, but could not see or hear any one there; the fire at this time was falling from the ceiling on the flooring and on a pile of clothes which laid on the floor in the northeast corner of the room; he then went to Mr. Trimer's house on the rear of the same lot, and woke him up; after the fire was out he saw the burnt remains of Mrs. Shepherd; the head was toward the street, at the extreme northeast end of the house and at about the place where witness saw what he supposed to be a bundle or pile of clothes in the upper room; the body lay on its back, arms spread open, and legs extended, the face all burnt off; one foot and part of the leg was also burnt off, and both hands were pretty much burnt off; witness is positive that the fire did not commence down stairs; he knew that Shepherd and wife did not live happily together; has heard him abuse her, and have seen a strange woman with him dressed in black; on one occasion Mrs. Shepherd came up to her husband while this woman was talking with him; she said to him, "You have got that dirty beast with you again;" he replied, "he could not help it, she would not stay away from him;" his wife then tried to take him away, when he called her a d—d b—h, and went off with the young woman.

John May testified that he is a member of the Fire Department, and resides in Fifty-third-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, in sight of the former residence of Jas. Shepherd; that at the time of the fire he was awoke by his wife, and went instantly to the street; he saw the fire and flames coming from the roof of the building; on reaching the premises he saw Shepherd in front of the house, calling out, "My frau—oh! my frau," meaning his wife; a policeman was there; witness's house was within 150 yards of the fire; he noticed at that time that all the fire was in the upper part of the building, and none down stairs; he did not see or hear Mrs. Shepherd; witness saw the old man Geyer, who lived in the lower part of the house, bring out his bed; witness was present when the body of deceased was found; he knew Mrs. Shepherd to be a smart, active woman; she went out to do washing almost every day; thinks that if she had been alive at the time of the fire she would have escaped from the house as well as her husband.

Christian Geyer testified that he lived in Shepherd's house on the first floor on the night of the fire; he saw Mrs. Shepherd return home about 8 o'clock, and that soon afterwards he went to bed; he did not use any light but went to bed in the dark; he did not awake until the alarm of fire; the burning was all above him and falling down; did not see or hear anything of Mrs. Shepherd; he had about 20 bundles of match sticks on a mattress in his front room, and after the fire he found several bundles only partly burned.

Henry Trimer testified that he owned the lot of ground on which Shepherd's house was built, and that about four years ago he assisted to build it; should say it was worth about fifty dollars at the time of the fire; did not know that Shepherd was insured, although Shepherd had often asked witness to get insured, saying they could get insured together; he knew that Shepherd had moved the best part of his house to Harlem, where he was building, and knew that Shepherd ill-treated his wife; often heard him abuse her in the middle of the night.

Frederick Tanger testified he lived next door to Shepherd, and was aware that Shepherd ill-treated his wife, and was in the habit of drinking.

Catherine Heeney testified: That a little over a year ago both Shepherd and his wife joined the Baptist Church in Fifty-third-street, and that he treated his wife better afterwards, until the past two or three months, when he took to drinking again and ill-treated her; Mrs. Shepherd came to the house of witness about ten days before the fire and burst out crying; she said; "James had broken out drinking again;" shortly after Mr. Shepherd got insured his wife told witness that she was afraid that he would burn the house down.

Mary Dibie, testified that she was often at Shepherd's house in Fifty-third-street, and was second cousin to his wife, and knew that she never lived happily with him; in February or March last, took tea at Shepherd's house in company with my husband and my mother; previous to leaving, Shepherd showed us an insurance paper, and said he should have a bonfire there some night; he then laughed; deceased often told witness about a young woman named Robinson, who dressed in black, that was after her husband, and that whenever she went to the building where her husband was at work, she would always find this woman there; deceased asked witness on the Thursday previous to the fire, if James had sold her about her falling down and breaking a watch; witness said no; deceased then replied that her husband had said he wished that it had been her neck that was broken instead of the watch; upon saying this deceased burst outcrying.

William Lozenbo, a boy about eleven years of age, testified to being at Shepherd's house one day at about twelve o'clock, when Shepherd came home drunk and wanted his wife to give him a dollar, and on her refusing to give it to him he picked up a plate to throw at her, but did not do so; he then took her gold watch and said he would get a dollar on that. The boy was sent to watch Shepherd, who sent him back to the house twice to ask for a dollar, but each time Mrs. Shepherd refused to give it to him.

Robert Dibie testified that while at Shepherd's house, on Sunday afternoon, Shepherd showed him an insurance policy on his house; witness looked at it, and asked why he got insured when he was going to live at Harlem; Shepherd replied, he intended to burn the house, and Jane along with it; he then laughed; as soon as witness heard of the fire, he thought Shepherd had carried out his intention.

On the testimony adduced, Justice Davison issued a warrant for Shepherd's arrest. On Sunday last, Mr. Baker visited Harlem, found the whereabouts of the accused, and officer Bethell of the Twelfth Ward, took him into custody. The prisoner stands committed for further examination before Justice Davison.

The Great Fistic [illegible] Bradley and Rankin.

The great Prize-Fight for $1,000 a side, between BRADLEY and RANKIN, of Philadelphia, of which the sporting papers have had so much to say, came off at Fort Albin, (Canada,) a few miles from Buffalo, on Saturday last. The betting on the ground was at $100 to $60 on BRADLEY, the heaviest and better-known of the combatants. After fighting 151 rounds, which lasted 2 hours and 08 minutes, BRADLEY was declared the winner.

The contest is described by those who saw it as one of the finest and best-contested on record. The hitting was admirable. Both parties were badly "punished," BRADLEY not so much as to prevent him starting soon afterwards for home with his friends. He passed through this City yesterday afternoon, and was warmly greeted by the lovers of his art.

Large sums of money were lost and won by the fancy both here and in Philadelphia.

BRADLEY (and RANKIN, too, we believe) is an Irishman. He keeps a porter-house in Philadelphia, of which place he has for years been known as the "Champion." Some four or five years since he challenged TOM HYER, and arrangements for a contest between these parties were made, but it fell through, owing to some difficulty about the stakes, which were to be for $10,000 a side. He is a very large man, larger than HYER. He will now be a greater lion than ever, and can make a fortune out of his porter-house, and the crowds who flock to see him, unless, like most of such champions, he should become intoxicated by the honors thrust upon him, and grow helplessly dissipated.

The interest manifested as to the result of this combat in this City was very great. The various newspaper offices were thronged on Saturday night by "artists," "sinkers," "roughs," "sporting" and "fancy" men of all kinds, eagerly inquiring whether any dispatches about the great fight had been received. This was the first intimation that most respectable folks had hereabouts that any "great fight" had taken place.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, Aug. 3.

The prize fight for a thousand dollars a side, between DOMINICK BRADLEY and S. S. RANKIN, of this city, which has caused so much excitement among the "Fancy" of late, came off on Saturday afternoon. BRADLEY was victorious. We have had a conversation with an eye witness of the affair, who gives us the following particulars:

The party left Buffalo on Saturday on a steamboat chartered for the purpose, and proceeded to an island fourteen miles distant from that city, where a ring was formed. A Sheriff from Canada, with a posse of officers, made an attempt to stop the fight, but the rowdies thrashed the police and went on with their work.

The fighting commenced at 4 o'clock. At the third or fourth round it was manifest that RANKIN was beaten, and the latter was "floored" by his adversary more than one hundred times.

The fight lasted two hours and fifty-seven seconds, during which time one hundred and fifty six rounds were fought. At the hundred and fifty-seventh round RANKIN was unable to come to the "scratch," and was declared vanquished.

RANKIN was so terribly beaten that it is thought he will not recover. His nose is broken in two places, his ears are split and he is otherwise dreadfully hurt. After the battle he was unable to recognize his most intimate friends. BRADLEY escaped with a black eye and a confused lip.

BILL MCCULLIN, of the Fourth Ward, in this city, and —— BECTHERON, of New-York, acted as umpires. The place where the fight took place, was the same spot upon which the fight between RANIGAN and LAZARUS took place some time since.

The scene on Saturday was most disgraceful, there was a great deal of drunkenness, and fights were innumerable outside the ring. Fifteen or twenty outside fights were in progress at one time.

As soon as the fight was over, the party returned to Buffalo, from which point they scattered as soon as possible, being apprehensive that RANKIN would die, and that those who were present at the fight would be arrested. Our informant is unable to give us any information as to what became of RANKIN, but it is probable his injuries compelled him to remain at Buffalo.

There is much rejoicing over the event among the friends of BRADLEY, and the friends of the other bully are greatly depressed.

The principals in this disgraceful business are both Irish, and both are tavern keepers. The persons who have been most interested in the result are the lower class of the countrymen of the bruisers. The admirers of the bullies have gathered in great strength for the past two days about the respective holes of the "champions," and there has been a very large consumption of bad rum in consequence.

Not the least disgusting feature of this disgusting business is the fact that religion of its name has been mixed up in it. BRADLEY, the victor, is a Catholic, or claims to be one, and the vanquished ruffian is a member of the Protestant Association. Catholicism and Protestantism are therefore dragged into the conflict, and men who scarcely know what either name implies are grieving over the result, or crowing with the victor, for the religious principles involved.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, Monday.

Two tugs left the Creek this morning, having on board the pugilists BRADLEY and RANKIN, and a large party of friends, backers and lookers-on. The locality of the fight will be in the neighborhood of Point Abino. This promises to be a terrible fight. We saw BRADLEY last night. He is six feet in height, very broad-shouldered, and looked the impersonation of physical strength. His usual weight is 232 pounds, but he has trained down to less than 190. It is said that RANKIN is lighter built but more lively. The weight and strength of the combatants is such that we should not be surprised, to hear of a fatal result. BRADLEY is a good-natured looking fellow, but he looks as if a full blow from his fist would kill.

There was a great crowd of the fancy about the "sporting houses" on Exchange street last night. BRADLEY stopped there, and RANKIN at Cold Spring. The city police were on hand mixing in the crowd, all interested in the fight and expressing regret that they dare not attend it.

The intense interest felt in this fight, by sporting men throughout the United States and Canada, has affected many Buffalonians, who have no relation with the fancy; and in the event of an arrest on the Canada side, some names of gentlemen who could not restrain their curiosity to "see this sort of thing, just once," would be likely to figure to the astonishment of those outside the circle of the excitement.

The Shield Forever.

NEW-YORK, Friday, July 31, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Now that our Police force are being organized with a view to be of some benefit to the inhabitants of this crime-ridden Metropolis, would it not be a good idea to adopt a feature of the Philadelphia Police system, and that is, the policemen wear their badge at all times, whether on active duty or not except in cases where they are on detective duty. The officers in Philadelphia wear the badges the same as the patrolmen.

Are our "inspectors" and "Sergeants" ashamed of their insignia of office, or what is the reason they never wear their shields? ARGUS EYE.

Custom-House Delays.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

A Correspondent signing himself "C," complains of the delay in getting his goods after duties being paid fifteen days. We beg to state our grievance of the same nature. The bark Whistling Wind, from Rotterdam, with wines, &c. for us, arrived June 4, 1857. These goods were most all sold to arrive, and we paid duties on the whole of them, and got permit aboard on the 14th of June, but could not get our goods, and did not get them until July 6, thereby losing sales and ten per cent. duties reduction. Have we no claim for this excess of duties? C. & R.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 1, 1857.

Wisconsin Crops, &c.

VIROQUA, Badax Co., WIS., Saturday, July 25, 1857.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

I see it stated in your agricultural reports that large portions of the Winter wheat in Illinois was killed out. Though the Winter was as severe or more so here than in that State, the Winter wheat came up in fine condition in the Spring, and is now nearly ripe, bearing promise of an abundant crop. The other cereals and corn are in as promising a state. Your correspondent, "Shibboleth," would do well to try Northwestern Wisconsin. On its rolling prairies and ridges he would find no epidemic prevailing. A healthier country does not exist than this is, with the exception of the river bottoms, where some malaria does prevail.

Mr. Branch Solicits Attention.

ALLEN RENDEZVOUS, Aug. 4, 1857.

Attention, Aliens!

Gentle Summer murmurs whisper in my ears that JAMES W. GERARD, Judge CLERKE, Judge RUSSELL, Fire-Marshal BAKER, Hatter GERRY, Captain LEONARD, DICKEY SUSSERS, DICKEY CORNOLLY, GEORGE PURRER, Mayor HARPER, Col. FREMONT, and President BUCHANAN, are natives of British and Irish soil, and have never been naturalized. You will, therefore, immediately disprove these serious accusations, or I shall be very reluctantly compelled to proceed against you, as the law directs.

Those of you who have committed perjury, I shall in tears consign to a dungeon's gloom. I learn that Mr. BUCHANAN is nearly 70 years old, and came to this country with his Irish father, and I am about to send a faithful messenger to Ireland for his baptismal Parish records. Colonel FREMONT I have already called as a native of Montreal; and poor, pale, thin, disconsolate and desolate little GERRY MAYOR is raising potatoes, onions and cabbages, in the wilds of Iowa. Hard is the lot of perjured aliens.

MURDEROUS AFFRAY—ONE MAN STABBED AND ANOTHER SHOT.

About 11¾ o'clock on Saturday night a difficulty occurred at the house of DANIEL MOUNT on Greenwich-street, near Harrison, between LEWIS and JOHN SHERMAN and THOMAS CONNERY, in which the last named was severely cut with a large carving knife. It appears that CONNERY entered the house and called upon a colored man employed there to black his boots, and they both passed out into the yard. While there an altercation took place between them, and CONNERY cut him in the face with a knife, after which he returned to the bar-room. He then addressed himself to JOHN SHERMAN, who is concerned in the proprietorship of the house, and stated that he had cut the colored man for some alleged impertinence. SHERMAN told him it was wrong altogether; that if the negro had offended him he should have struck him, and not used a knife. CONNERY replied that he had cut the negro, and would cut anybody else who gave him a like provocation. Some words then followed, but all was apparently quiet afterwards, and CONNERY left the room.

After an absence of about ten minutes he returned and renewed the conversation with JOHN SHERMAN and then expressed his friendship for him. At this time LEWIS SHERMAN was in the room and sitting near the counter, against the East wall. CONNERY went up to him, and he having seen a knife in his hands moved backward and told him not to come too close. They had a few words when LEWIS dealt him a blow on the head with a hickory club which stagger'd him, but he recovered, went at him and they clinched and fell upon the floor near the front door. JOHN SHERMAN then ran up with a large carving knife and commenced cutting CONNERY, and did not desist until the knife was taken from him by a young man named JAMES FOWLER.

Besides nine flesh wounds about the body, he has one over the left forearm covering all the sinews and one of the smaller branches of the radial artery; another was near the shoulder on the same arm, severing all the sinews and reaching to the bone; another on the back part of the head, just above the occipital, 3½ about three and a half inches long and down to the skull; another was on the temporal muscle down to the skull, and one her in the back part of the head. There were also several other cuts of serious character about the head and face.

As soon as the parties were separated, CONNERY was removed bleeding profusely to the house of STEPHEN MOODY, on Saratoga-street, where Drs. MCWILLIAMS and WATSON dressed his wounds. The police at once went in search of the party who inflicted the wounds, but CONNERY refused to give his name, stating that he was a friend and he would not prosecute him. JOHN SHERMAN, however, was subsequently arrested. About seven o'clock yesterday morning the same negro who had been cut by CONNERY was there sweeping up the room, and the latter entered with a gun in his hand. The negro became alarmed, ran up stairs, awoke the bar-keeper, and told him to go down stairs as he was afraid. The bar-keeper went down stairs and found CONNERY, who asked him for LEWIS SHERMAN.

After being told that he was not there, he fell, and a few minutes after SHERMAN entered the house and walked to the end of the bar near the back door. Almost immediately after CONNERY appeared at the front door with a gun in his hand and salu'ed SHERMAN in a friendly manner, which was replied to in the same way. He then remarked—"I saw you rather get the best of me last night, and I want you to fight me." SHERMAN answered that he was not able to fight him, when CONNERY said "then I will kill you," and raised the gun (a carbine) to his shoulder. SHERMAN stooped behind the bar, and when CONNERY took the gun from his shoulder slipped out of the house and into the yard. CONNERY then walked to the rear of the room, raised the gun to his shoulder, fired, and immediately fled through the front door and up Saratoga to St. Paul-street, where he was arrested by Officers BATCHELOR and WRIGHT, who heard the report of the gun and suspected what had occurred.

As soon as CONNERY had fled, SHERMAN entered the back door, and asked that some thing be done for him as he was shot. He was at once removed to his residence on Holliday-street, near Pleasant, where, up to a late hour last night, he laid in a precarious condition. The gun was charged with slugs, a portion of which entered the right arm and badly shattered it. Four were subsequently taken from the wound. Another slug entered the left side of the face in a line with the mouth, and passed through the tendons of the neck, nearly to the carotid artery. The wound was probed, but the slug could not be reached. It is supposed that it lodged in the muscles at the back of the neck. The parties had always been on intimate terms of friendship. Captain BRADLEY, of the Middle District Police, notified Assistant Prosecutor PINCKNEY, Esq., Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, who ordered the committal of CONNERY and JOHN SHERMAN, on bench warrants, which was done. LEWIS SHERMAN was not in a condition to be removed, and was permitted to remain at his residence.

A DELIBERATE OUTRAGE.

Early on Saturday evening a German, named SUMMER, passing quietly down Bond-street, was met by two men in a buggy wagon, who shot at him, one ball passing into his right arm. The injury is fortunately slight, but the deadly intent was none the less. No arrests.

STILL ANOTHER MURDEROUS AFFRAY.

A murderous affair occurred between 11 and 12 o'clock on Saturday night. Briefly, as far as we can learn, there were parties rallying under the distinguished cognomens of several clubs, met at a ball opened at a house in Fell-street, kept by a Mr. MYERS. A difficulty occurred among them which led to blows. This was settled, and the parties left the premises. After leaving the difficulty was renewed at the corner of Ann and Lancaster streets, and and more blows were exchanged. Mr. CHARLES CHANDLER, a youth, scarcely of age, it is stated, interfered to prevent a difficulty, when fire-arms were discharged, and he, in passing between contending crowds, received two bullets—one passing through his thigh and another into his abdomen, lodging in the back. He was taken to his residence in Canton-avenue, near Wolf street, where he was attended by Professor MOSHER, who extracted the balls. He is considered in a critical state. One arrest was made—that of MCGREEVY, who was arrested as a participant and held for court.

AND STILL ANOTHER.

Yesterday evening, between 5 and 6 o'clock, three young men were passing along Eastern-avenue, when they were assailed by a party; some say they were Irishmen, others say they sung out the cry of "Peelers." This was done when they reached the corner of President street and Eastern-avenue. A young man named THOMAS W. JEWELL, whose parents reside on Montgomery-street, Federal Hill, was beaten badly, knocked down with slung shots, stamped upon and rendered insensible. He had several severe wounds upon his head, but it was supposed the most serious injury was internal. He was humanely taken into the residence of Mr. JACOB SNYDER, whose good lady carefully attended to him until a hack arrived, and he was taken home.

AND ANOTHER YET.

About 8¼ o'clock, last night, a young man named JOHN BERRY had some words with another party at the northeast corner of North and Baltimore streets, and after a short tarry passed up North-street. He had gone but a few steps when a third party stepped up to him, and asked him if he had not insulted a gentleman on the corner, and with the question dealt him three blows with his fist. He then ran to the middle of the street and fired a pistol at BERRY, the ball from which took effect in the back of the right thigh, producing, however, only a flesh wound. The assailant, who was not known, then ran off and effected his escape.

The Murder at Navesink.

The body of ALFRED S. MOSES, the unfortunate man murdered at the Sea View House, by JAMES P. DONNELLY, the bookkeeper of that hotel, was buried on Sunday morning, before daylight, at Chapel Hill Churchyard, five miles from the Highlands. Even at that unusual hour, a large crowd attended, including the relatives of the deceased in carriages.

After Coroner CONNERY had concluded his labors on Saturday, Justice W. S. PARSONS, of Monmouth County, arrived at the Hotel, and having impanneled a jury, proceeded to hold a legal inquest. After the testimony of the proprietor of the Hotel, and one or two other parties were taken, and the evidence taken before Coroner CONNERY incorporated with the proceedings, the following verdict was rendered:

New-Jersey, Monmouth County, ss.: An inquisition taken and indented at Middletown, in the county aforesaid, the 1st day of August, 1857, before me, WALTER C. PARSONS, one of the Justices of the Peace of the said county, upon the view of ALFRED S. MOSES, then and there lying dead, upon the oaths of twelve Jurymen, good and lawful men of the county aforesaid, who being sworn and charged to inquire on the part of the State of New-Jersey, where, when, how and after what manner the said MOSES came to his death, do say upon their oaths that one JAMES P. DONNELLY, a native of the City of New-York, did on this, the 1st day of August, in the year aforesaid, and in the county aforesaid, feloniously kill and murder the said ALFRED S. MOSES, by cutting his throat with a dirk-knife or other sharp instrument. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals, in the County aforesaid.

E. F. Taylor,	Geo. M. Mount,	Peter F. Schenck,
Elijah Van Brunt,	John Morlets,	Henry Holland,
G. W. Tompkins,	D. C. Cummings,	John Conert,
Wm. F. Fulhard,	J. J. Thompson,	A. H. Tompkins.

WALTER C. PARSONS, Justice of the Peace.

The prisoner was then securely handcuffed and conveyed to the County Jail at Freehold. He strenuously denies the crime, but the evidence against him is overpowering. He is a young man of very genteel appearance, and was educated for the medical profession.

☞ The visit of the New-York Florence Association to Boston and environs will take place under the marshalship of CYRUS P. MOSES, of HARPERS' establishment. The New-Yorkers will be received by the "Boston City Club," a committee of which organization is now in the City. Saturday, 8th inst., has been selected as the day of departure. They return by way of New-Haven—remaining in that city two days, the 17th and 18th inst.

LONG ISLAND.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—PHILIP CLARK, residing at the corner of Van Brunt and Carroll streets, was run on accident on Sunday afternoon, which caused his immediate death. He fell from the fourth story of the house, No. 16 Summit-street. It appears that he called on some friends at No. 16 Summit-street, on Sunday morning, and after remaining some time with MRS. MYERS, the woman residing there, went out for some brandy which was drank all around, and then he left the house. About 3 o'clock he called again upon MRS. MYERS and was much intoxicated. He was invited into the room and took a seat on the window-sill, which is about four feet from the floor. When he came in Mr. PATRICK GILLAN and MRS MYERS were in the room. GILLAN was reading a paper at one window, MRS. MYERS was ironing at a table and deceased was sitting in the other window with his back leaning against the casing. MRS. MYERS according to her own statement, which is corroborated by others, says that she went out of the room soon after deceased came in, and went down stairs into the yard; on returning she saw a crowd about the door and saw deceased on the sidewalk dead. She knew nothing of how he came to his death.

GILLAN, who was in the room at the time deceased fell from the window, says that the first he knew of the accident was a crash of glass or a box falling, and the next he saw was deceased lying on the sidewalk, dead.

Mr. P. J. SEMER, residing on Hamilton-avenue, the rear window of whose house overlooks the windows of the house of MRS. MYERS, says that he heard a crash as of some box falling, and immediately after saw the body of deceased lying on the walk.

MRS. FANNY MINGS, who resides on No. 166 Hamilton-avenue, states that she was looking out of her bedroom window and saw a person with a white shirt sitting in the window of the fourth story of the house No. 16 Summit-street. She observed a man coming towards him and placing his hands on this person's shoulder, after which she saw him fall, but did not think he was injured. He fell to the ground, and she saw him lying there dead. At the time she saw the man take deceased by the shoulder, there were two or three women standing near him. Owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, Sergeant FREEMAN caused the arrest of PATRICK GILLAN, MARY JANE MYERS and MARY KIRWIN, on a charge of having caused the death of deceased. They were conveyed to the Third District Station-house, and held to wait the action of the Coroner's Jury.

Deceased was a baker, and resided at the corner of Carroll and Van Brunt streets. He was 21 years of age and unmarried.

Coroner REDFORD ordered a post mortem examination, when it was shown that the deceased came to his death by fractures of the skull producing compression of the brain. An inquest will be held this morning.

A second meeting of this Board was held last evening in the Common Council chamber, Brooklyn, alderman FERRIS in the Chair.

The first resolution of the Committee relative to interest on public debt was, on motion of Alderman RALPHLESICK, laid on the table.

The second resolution to pay installments due on public debt was adopted.

An effort was made to increase the salaries of various officers, but failed. Among these was a motion to increase Health Officers' salary from $700 to $1,000.

The following resolution, relative to Sinking Fund, laid upon the table for the present, on motion of Alderman RALPHLESICK.

The fifth resolution, fixing the Public School Money at $138,000, was adopted, when the Board adjourned for one week.

COUNCILMAN McCAHILL UNDER ARREST.

The Board of Supervisors.

[illegible] PRESENT IN NEW YORK [illegible] THE MAYOR.

The Board of Supervisors met yesterday afternoon, President Conlin in the Chair. [illegible] was received from the Mayor, and ordered to be printed in the minutes:

[illegible] York, July 30, 1857.

[illegible] the Board of Supervisors:

[illegible] the Commissioner of Taxes to make [illegible] and draw up under the direction of the Committee of Ways and Means of your Board. It [illegible] the Board of Supervisors [illegible] 10 of the executive bodies [illegible] Very respectfully, your obedient servant, FERNANDO WOOD.

[illegible] Mr. Cochran in removing the [illegible] and garbage from the City, which, at the same [illegible] should be estimated at about $[illegible] a year, [illegible] making a grand total of $[illegible] on account of street cleaning.

I earnestly hope that this simple statement of facts will be sufficient to induce the Common Council to [illegible] forthwith upon the making of contracts by which the City may be cleaned and be kept cleaned, as well as to prevent a continuation of so large a disbursement of the public money without sufficient return.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Cleaning Streets.

BEGGARS FOR THE ARMY OF MERCHANTS.

The following was received from the Mayor:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Aug. 3, 1857.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

GENTLEMEN: I respectfully recommend that the Common Council shall authorize the Mayor to offer a suitable reward for the apprehension of the perpetrator of the brutal murders recently committed in this City. On Sunday evening, the 19th ultimo, John [illegible], a respectable German adopted citizen, and of most inoffensive and unexceptionable character, was captured while his wife, under circumstances well calculated to endanger the good order and peace of the whole community.

And on the night of the 27th ultimo, Lawrence E. Van Liew, another well known citizen of good character, was found shockingly murdered and robbed.

In either case, have clues been made, though in the former the Coroner's inquest clearly pointed to the [illegible] murderers. Without doubt, by a liberal reward, to men accustomed upon these occasions (to which may be added the number of a prisoner) within a few days, in the act of arresting a prisoner, it is sufficient to call your attention to the fact of the murders, and to state that no arrests have been made.

I ask, therefore, that a reward sufficiently liberal may be authorized at once, to the end that the murderers shall be discovered and punished.

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

Alderman TUCKER moved that the blank be filled with $100.

Alderman STORKE moved $1,000, which was carried.

THE POLICE TELEGRAPH, ETC.

The following was received from the Comptroller, read, laid over and ordered to be printed:

CORRESPONDENCE FROM COMPTROLLER FLAGG ON THE TELEGRAPH APPARATUS AND POLICE HEADQUARTERS—THE INCONVENIENCE OF A REMOVAL.

FINANCE DEPARTMENT, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, New-York, July 30, 1857.

To the Board of Aldermen:

The Comptroller has been furnished with a resolution of the Board of Aldermen, of which the following is a copy:

Resolved, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby requested to report to this Board, at its next meeting, whether the apartments formerly used by the Chief of Police have been taken possession of by parties claiming to have control of the Street Commissioner, and further, whether the telegraph apparatus in said apartments has been removed therefrom—if so, by whose orders, and by what authority the same has been done.

In reply, after the adoption of the above resolution, the Comptroller gave a copy of it to Mr. Ring, and requested him to obtain the information desired by the Board of Aldermen. He made inquiries into the matter, and reported to the Comptroller as follows, viz:

A. G. FLAGG, COMPTROLLER—Dear Sir: Agreeably to your request, I visited the office of the Chief of Police on the 16th inst., and ascertained that all the telegraphic operations were there, but that the wires were detached from the desk by Mr. Bell, the Superintendent, and that the next day it was claimed by him, and had only been used for about three months as an experiment. The reason for detaching the wires was for the purpose of vacating the office, which is claimed as part of the Mayor's Office, and occupied by the Chief, in accordance with the old Police law and ordinances of the Common Council, which make it the duty of the Chief to have his office in the Mayor's Office. Yours, &c., JOSEPH ROSE.

Soon after the return of Mr. Rose from the City Hall, Mr. Robinson, the operator of the Police telegraph, and Mr. Ring, the person selected by Mr. Devlin as the head of the Bureau for Opening Streets, called on the Comptroller to acquaint their agency in regard to the occupation of the room of the Chief of Police, and the disarrangement of the Police telegraph.

Mr. Robinson stated that the man with whom he had intrusted the operations of the telegraph came to his house and informed him that the rooms formerly occupied by the Chief of Police and the police telegraph, had been taken possession of for the use of the Street Department, or some of its bureaus, and that it was necessary he should come to the office immediately and take possession of such portion of the telegraph as belonged to him. In this connection, it is proper to state, Mr. Robinson claims to have made certain improvements in the operating portion of the telegraph at his own expense, and this is the principal apology for dismantling the police telegraph, at a time and under the circumstances referred to.

The payments heretofore made by the City on account of the police and fire telegraph, and the large sums paid to Mr. Robinson himself, show very conclusively that Mr. Robinson could not possess any right of property in the Police Telegraph, which warranted him in damaging the operating power at a moment when anarchy was rife in the City, and when such derangement might have produced the most disastrous consequences to the public peace.

On the 6th of November, 1853, a resolution was adopted by the Board of Aldermen referring to the Committee on Police the proposition to connect the different Police Stations together by telegraph for the purpose of expediting the business of the Police Department in sending to each Station house the location of fires, &c.

On the 27th of December, 1853, the Committee on Police reported as follows:

"Your Committee have also inquired into the merits of the different systems of telegraphing, as adapted to this purpose, and find that the Dial Telegraph, invented by Mr. O. Robinson, and exhibited by him in the office of the Chief of Police for the past three or four months, is in every respect the best adapted to this purpose, as any persons, policemen or others, without any instruction, may operate the same, whereas all other systems in use require persons to be regularly instructed as operators, which would render it impracticable for the Police Department. Your Committee would, therefore, offer for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Repairs and Supplies be instructed to contract with Messrs. Robinson & Miller for the construction of a telegraph upon Mr. Robinson's plan, in accordance with their proposition herein annexed, and that the sum of $12,500 be appropriated therefor."

"From our own views on the subject, and the recommendation of the Chief of Police, and the Captains of the different Station houses, as well as different officers of the Fire Department, we are convinced that it has become absolutely necessary that some means of speedy communication with the different Station-houses should be established for the better carrying out of arrests, quelling riots, and the better conducting of the Police Department generally. We further consider that such a telegraph would be of the greatest benefit to the Fire Department and City generally, as by this means fires occurring in any part of the City, the number of the house and street of such fire, can be instantly given to all parts of the City, thereby directing the fire apparatus to the fire, and saving immense amounts of property and running of the members of the Fire Department.

The above resolution was adopted by the Common Council on the 9th day of January, 1853, and the sum of $12,500 was paid by the City to Messrs. Robinson & Miller for the completion of the work.

In addition to this sum there have been paid for the Police and Fire Telegraph the several sums named in the statement annexed, marked A, amounting to a total of $17,468 49, from 1851 to 1857, thus showing that the City Treasury has paid for the Police and Fire Telegraph, during the period referred to, the total sum of $29,968 49.

In the year 1853 Mr. Robinson presented a claim to the Common Council for expenditures made by him in constructing the Fire Telegraph, and a resolution was passed authorizing the Comptroller to pay him the sum of $5,000 for his expenditures in that behalf. The Comptroller audited such accounts as Mr. Robinson was enabled to verify, and paid him $4,050, as shown in statement A.

In making this payment, the Comptroller took from Mr. Robinson a conveyance for all his interest in the Fire Telegraph, a copy of which is annexed, marked B.

In regard to the inquiry in the resolution "whether the apartments formerly used by the Chief of Police have been taken possession of by parties claiming to have control of the Street Department," the Comptroller inferred from his conversation with Mr. Ring that it had been taken possession of by some person adopted to take charge of Bureaus for the use of the Street Department. After the conversation with Mr. Ring, however, which induced a belief that the rooms of the late Chief of Police had been dedicated to the use of the Street Department, the Comptroller was informed that on application for the use of the room by Mr. Conover the rooms did not belong to the Street Department, but to the office of the Mayor, under a resolution passed by the Common Council on the fifth of June, 1849, of which the following is a copy:

Resolved, That the office now occupied by the City Inspector and the one formerly occupied by the Chief of Police, be assigned and appropriated for the use of the Mayor.

Section 18 of the new Police law provides that "all the telegraphic apparatus, public property, records, books and accountements now in the Police Department of New-York, are hereby given to the use of the Board of Police herein authorized."

Carrying out the fair intention of this law, the chief officer of Police, and the Police telegraph operator, [illegible] the room of the Mayor, in the new Police Department, and the operator, in the old Chief's quarters by the General Superintendent.

[illegible] $13,100 to construct a Police Telegraph in connection with the Fire Telegraph, are fruitless. The removal of the Chief's central station at the City Hall, and the derangement and discontinuance of the Police Telegraph.

The office of the Chief, in the City Hall, was the most important police station in the whole City, and its transfer to the new Police as provided in the law, was more important than that of any other Station-house.

The occupancy of these rooms by Mr. Ring under the orders of the Street Commissioner, or any other person, was as clearly illegal as it would have been if Mr. Devlin to have taken possession of and opened an office in the commodious building constructed for the Sixth Ward Station house.

The law, and the interest and well-being of the City, require that the rooms occupied by the Chief of Police, in the City Hall, should be at once restored to their original condition, and surrendered to the new Police Commissioners.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. G. FLAGG, Comptroller.

Mr. Cochran sent a communication to the Board, as Street Commissioner, the reading of which was opposed by Alderman Storke and Councilman on the ground that every night there is the Board remained him as Street Commissioner, over so slightly.

Alderman TUCKER called for the reading, on the ground that he could not vote to dispose of it without knowing what it was. The communication, which referred to city grades, was finally read and laid on the table.

The resolution directing the Comptroller to pay the Municipal Patrolmen down to the time they were disbanded by the Mayor, was called up by Alderman STORKE, who moved its adoption. He did it for the purpose of giving the additional color of claim, as he believed (though he had no right to) their pay.

Alderman TUCKER feared letting pass the regular legal course through the Courts. The resolution was finally adopted by a constitutional majority.

The resolution appropriating $1,100 to receive the Mayors and Commissioners of St. Louis and Chicago, was called up.

Alderman TUCKER opposed the appropriation.

Alderman DRAKE and COULTER favored the passage of the resolution, and were not afraid of the movement tax, because it was not likely the parties would come to the City at all.

The resolution was laid on the table, and the Board adjourned to Wednesday next.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board of Councilmen met, on Monday evening. In the absence of the President the Chair was occupied by Councilman JONES.

After the recitation of the minutes a document was handed to the reader in reference to

STREET BEGGARS.

The paper was a resolution, calling upon the Metropolitan Police to enforce the existing ordinance against street beggars. It is thus worded:

Whereas, the street begging and vagrancy has become an intolerable nuisance and is growing upon us daily, not only in the shape of lame, loathsome mendicants, but able-bodied, sturdy beggars, who ply for alms, and who go about from door to door, placing themselves in the streets to beg and to receive alms. There are also women with children in their arms, whom they drug with opiates or torture in order to excite sympathy, behind which we witness, as the result, their miserable forms for a like purpose.

And Whereas, The Metropolitan Police are required to obey and enforce all ordinances of the Common Council, therefore,

Be it Ordained, That the police be directed to arrest all persons asking alms on the street, or who go about from door to door, or who have their children in public places to beg and excite pity; also, all persons who be found under shelter, sleeping in uninhabited buildings or in the streets, and giving no proper account of themselves.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

A petition of Engine Company No. 31, asking for a new engine of the larger class, was referred to the Fire Department Committee.

Mr. Graham Quinn presented a petition complaining that during the riot of the Fourth of July his goods and wares at No. 69 Bayard street, consisting of crockery, China, glass, and fancy articles of considerable value, were smashed by the rioters. He says "the loss will fall heavily on a poor struggling man," and he hopes the Councilmen "will take his case in hand," and "see justice done to him, in their wisdom." Referred to Finance Committee.

REWARDS FOR DISCOVERY.

A resolution was offered requesting his Honor the Mayor to offer a reward for the detection of the murderer of Aug. 7, Van Liew, on the night of Monday, July 27. Laid over on motion.

The following communication was sent in by the Comptroller:

THE ARSENAL LOTS.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, July 29, 1857.

To the Common Council:

The attention of the Common Council is respectfully invited to the condition of the Arsenal lots, the purchase of which was authorized by an act of the last Legislature. That act, chapter 630, section 3, authorizes the purchase of said lots by the City, and provides that "if the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonality or the Commissioners of the Central Park of the City of New York, shall elect to purchase the same, for the purposes of the said Central Park, and shall give notice in writing to that effect to the Commissioners, hereinafter appointed, ten days before the day designated for such sale," &c., "the Commissioners of the Land Office are directed to convey the same to the said Mayor, Aldermen and Commonality, of the City of New-York, on receiving from said City the sum of two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars." In pursuance of an ordinance of the Common Council, passed June 17, 1857, money has been borrowed for the purpose of completing such purchase.

Section 7 of that ordinance declares that "The Comptroller shall pay the Commissioners of the Land Office the said sum of two hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars as the price or purchase money for the State Arsenal, and all the land appertaining to the same belonging to the State, situated in the City of New-York, upon receiving a good and valid deed or conveyance thereof, vesting the same in the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonality of the City of New-York free from all incumbrances."

It appears by reference to an assessment confirmed by the Common Council May 1, 1857, that there is a lien on the Arsenal property of $8,001 14, for regulating and grading Sixty-third-street from Fifth to Sixth avenues.

On the day fixed for the sale of the Arsenal property by the Commissioners of the Land Office, the undersigned mentioned to the State Comptroller that there was a lien on the property, and that the ordinance of the Common Council required a valid deed "free from all incumbrances." The State Comptroller expressed an opinion that the Commissioners of the Land Office would not be willing to pay the said lien, inasmuch as the assessment was confirmed after the passage of the law.

The history of the contract for regulating and grading Sixty-third-street, is as follows:

On the 14th of November, 1851, an ordinance passed the Common Council for regulating and grading Sixty-third-street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

STREET CLEANING.

The Conference Committee presented their report on a special order in reference to street cleaning.

After considerable discussion, in which Councilmen McCahill, took a prominent part, the matter was made special for next Wednesday evening.

DOCK MASTERS.

Councilman OTTERSON wished to amend—that the Fifteenth Ward have only one dock master, the Ward having a water front only in the fountain in Washington square. The amendment was lost.

An amendment was moved by Councilman WARNER that all the Wards (including the Nineteenth, about which there had been some debate) should be furnished with two dock masters. Carried.

A message was received from his Honor the Mayor, recommending a resolution be adopted, offering a reward to the payment of a reward on the conviction of the murderers of the late John Muller; also, on the conviction of the murderers of Lawrence E. Van Liew, inclosing also the resolution of Councilman Anderson.

Referred to Committee on Police.

A communication was received from the Commissioner of Streets, D. D. Conover. It was moved to lay it on the table, which, after some debate, was carried by 22 to 14.

The member for the Fifty-eighth, Councilman McCAHILL, had not voted, though required to do so.

The Chairman asked what was to be done in the matter.

Councilman OTTERSON advised that he be compelled. Himself had been put under arrest under circumstances alleged to be similar, and he demanded equal handed justice.

Councilman McCAHILL said that question ought to be over under the rules.

Items moved to adjourn.

Councilman OTTERSON called the yeas and nays and on that question, which was lost.

An amendment was then offered to substitute in the stead Councilman OTTERSON for Councilman McCAHILL.

Councilman BRILLEY spoke of the maintenance of the dignity of the Board. He occupied some time in defending Councilman McCAHILL.

Councilman BEADY wanted to know what Councilman OTTERSON had done that he should be placed in contempt. He would call upon Councilman BRILLEY to give his reasons for an extraordinary amendment.

Councilman BRILLEY, in reply, said it was done by way of retort.

Councilman McCAHILL would then have offered the explanations he was so desirous to have given as to the reason why he could not vote.

Councilman WARNER objected to such explanation being given.

Councilman McCAHILL maintained he was not in contempt.

Councilman OTTERSON asked if it were not true that he had refused to vote. The question was now upon his commital. He moved that he be placed under arrest. The vote being called—

Councilman BULLEYE asked leave to explain his vote, but was told that unanimous consent was necessary, which consent was denied by Councilman OTTERSON. Councilman BULLEYE sat down reluctantly. The Sergeant-at-Arms approaching him by order of the Chairman, and threatening to arrest him if he did not vote.

Councilman BULLEYE instantly voted "No."

On vote, by 24 to 17, Councilman McCAHILL was declared under arrest, and given in charge to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Board then instantly adjourned amid much laughter and some confusion and warm feeling.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

Before Hon. Justice Davies.

THE JOHN-STREET METHODIST CHURCH.

Wyatt et al. vs. Benson et al.—The John-street Church litigation has by no means been finished yet. Yesterday Mr. Cutler, who represents the down-town members, made a motion, before Justice Davies, for the appointment of a receiver, to take possession of all the Church property, now in the defendant's hands, and for an order to compel the Receiver to pay out of the property the amount of a loan, $100, from the Annual Conference of the Church. Affidavits were read on each side, and after hearing considerable argument his Honor denied the motion. He granted an order of reference, to ascertain whether the up-town members had any funds belonging to the Church in their possession. The referee was not named.

Before Hon. Justice Bosworth.

DECISIONS.

Wallace vs. Doherty.—The complaint contained three causes of action; two were settled by paying over the sum of $100; the third was put at issue and the plaintiff had a verdict for $46. The third cause of action being for the conversion of personal property, and "for the recovery of money," the defendant's right to costs is absolute; Code, section 263. The question of costs must be disposed of precisely as it would be if the complaint had never contained more than this particular cause of action. Taxation affirmed.

The Stock Market was a week ago the most of the Railroad list, though leaving off rather the printed list of the Second Board 2 ₩ cent higher than the reported sales on Michigan Southern, and ⅛@⅜ better on Erie. The Reading transfers reopened to-day, and the payment of the dividend will be made to the New-York holders of the Stock at the Farmers' Trust Office to-morrow. The cash price was firm on the deliveries of the day, and 72¼ was paid on the Street. Time sales were made in the afternoon at 71⅞@⅝, seller 30 days. New-York Central was firm at the early Board, but fell off to 83¼ ex-dividend for the opening in the afternoon. The variations in Michigan Southern were from 80⅝@80⅞@80⅝. There was a fair amount of general business done through the day.

The week opens on a quiet, easy Money Market. In Foreign Bills for the Cunarder on Wednesday there is not much business yet accomplished. The inquiry to-day denotes some degree of firmness in Sterling, the market being in the control of the regular drawers. The rates are 109⅛@109⅜ ₩ cent. Francs are offered at 5.17½@5.16¼. There is a fair export demand for Bar Silver. The supply of Bar Gold is not large. The present engagements for Wednesday are about $800,000. The Sub-Treasury receipts to-day were $255,895; payments $517,704; balance this afternoon $12,100,718.

The Manhattan Bank has made a half-yearly dividend of 5 ₩ cent., payable 11th inst.; and the Ocean Bank 3½ ₩ cent., payable 10th inst.
